Updates and Planning Nuggets 2019

By: Martin M. Shenkman, Esq.

1. # don't delete this '#'
2. 199A QBI Deduction.
  - a. Final corrected Code Sec. 199A regulations were issued.<sup>1</sup> The following overview of selected portions of the Final corrected Regulations quotes from the preamble and explains the planning implications for some of the provisions.
  - b. The final corrected Regulations provide a succinct overview of 199A: “Section 199A provides a deduction of up to 20 percent of income from a domestic business operated as a sole proprietorship or through a partnership, S corporation, trust, or estate. The section 199A deduction may be taken by individuals and by some estates and trusts. A section 199A deduction is not available for wage income or for business income earned through a C corporation (as defined in section 1361(a)(2)). For taxpayers whose taxable income exceeds a statutorily-defined amount (threshold amount), section 199A may limit the taxpayer’s section 199A deduction based on (i) the type of trade or business engaged in by the taxpayer, (ii) the amount of W-2 wages paid with respect to the trade or business (W-2 wages), and/or (iii) the UBIA of qualified property held for use in the trade or business (UBIA of qualified property). These statutory limitations are subject to phase-in rules based upon taxable income above the threshold amount.”
  - c. Practitioners will have to continue to struggle in many instances with the daunting details, complexities and uncertainties of these regulations. If the so-called Blue Wave continues in 2020 and there is a change in administration in Washington the favorable tax rates for corporations may be changed and if so the purpose of 199A, to put non-C corporations somewhat on parity, will be eliminated. That might lead to the repeal of 199A. So, an issue practitioners must address is not merely planning for 199A, but is the cost of that planning worthwhile to the clients affected given what might be uncertainty about the survival of the provision. In any event, 199A is set to sunset after 2025 even if there is no change in the administration in Washington.
  - d. “However, taxpayers may rely on the rules set forth in §§1.199A-1 through 1.199A-6, in their entirety, or on the proposed regulations under §§1.199A-1 through 1.199A-6 issued on August 16, 2018, in their entirety, for taxable years ending in calendar year 2018.” Thus, on 2018 returns can be based on either the proposed Regs or these final corrected Regs.
  - e. “The purpose and scope of the proposed regulations and these final regulations are also to determine when to treat two or more trusts as a single trust for purposes of subchapter J of chapter 1 of subtitle A of the Code (subchapter J). These final regulations are not intended to address section 643 in general.” The final regulations continue a focus on restricting the use of trusts to circumvent the taxable income threshold under 199A. However, as noted below the Final Regs significantly change the approach to 643(f) and the examples from the Proposed Regs were eliminated, thus providing less guidance.

- f. An important focus of the 199A Regs, especially the final corrected Regs, is eliminating what the IRS perceived as abuses practitioners had discussed with the use of multiple non-grantor trusts to secure 199A deductions when the taxpayer herself may not have qualified. “Part I of subchapter J provides rules related to the taxation of estates, trusts, and beneficiaries. For various subparts of part I of subchapter J, sections 643(a), 643(b), and 643(c) define the terms distributable net income (DNI), income, and beneficiary, respectively. Sections 643(d) through 643(i) (other than section 643(f)) provide additional rules. Section 643(f) grants the Secretary authority to treat two or more trusts as a single trust for purposes of subchapter J if (1) the trusts have substantially the same grantors and substantially the same primary beneficiaries and (2) a principal purpose of such trusts is the avoidance of the tax imposed by chapter 1 of the Code. Section 643(f) further provides that, for these purposes, spouses are treated as a single person.”
- g. The Final Regs merely reiterate the 643(f) Code provisions for multiple trusts here and near the end of the Regs. The examples from the Proposed Regs have been eliminated. It would appear that if the strictures of Code Section 643(f) can be avoided the multiple trust rule will not apply but the anti-avoidance rules of the Final Regs will still have to be grappled with.
- h. In determining the 199A deduction practitioners have to identify a “trade or business” from which qualified business income (“QBI”) is generated. The Final Regulations provide: “The calculation of QBI and therefore, the benefits of section 199A, are limited to taxpayers with income from a trade or business. Section 199A and its legislative history, however, do not define the phrase “trade or business.” The proposed regulations define trade or business by reference to section 162. Section 162(a) permits a deduction for all the ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred in carrying on a trade or business...However, because many taxpayers who will now benefit from the section 199A deduction are already familiar with the trade or business standard under section 162, using the section 162 standard appears to be the most practical for taxpayers and the IRS...Specifically, for purposes of section 199A and the regulations thereunder, §1.199A-1(b)(14) defines trade or business as a trade or business under section 162 (section 162 trade or business) other than the trade or business of performing services as an employee.”
- i. The definition of a trade or business under 162 does incorporate a large existing body of law, but also leaves substantial uncertainties, e.g. when leased real estate will qualify, and much complexity, e.g. calculations, aggregation and more. The Final Regs confirm that the trade or business test under 162 is a factual determination and Treasury did not choose to provide any additional guidance.
- j. The Final Regulations refer to case law as to the definition of what constitutes a trade or business, citing one case in particular: “Because there is no statutory or regulatory definition of a section 162 trade or business, courts have established elements to determine the existence of a trade or business. The courts have developed two definitional requirements. One, in relation to profit motive, is said to require the taxpayer to enter into and carry on the activity with a good faith intention to make a profit or with the belief that a profit can be made from the activity. The second is in relation to the scope of the activities and is said to require considerable, regular, and continuous activity. See generally Commissioner v. Groetzinger, 480 U.S. 23 (1987). In the seminal case of Groetzinger, the Supreme Court stated, “[w]e do not overrule or cut back on the Court’s holding in Higgins when we conclude that if one’s gambling activity is pursued full time, in good faith, and with regularity, to the production of income for a livelihood, and is not a mere hobby, it is a trade or business within the statutes with which we are here concerned.” Id. at 35.”

- k. The factual determination of whether there is a trade or business requires a profit motive and considerable, regular and continuous activity. Considerable, regular and continuous under 162 does not require the level of involvement necessary to constitute material participation under 469. Clients should be advised to make a point of creating corroborating evidence that these criteria are met if there is any question as to qualification. 162 is a narrower definition of trade or business than 469 discussed below. For real estate the 469 classification is irrelevant and the taxpayer will have to prove that the real estate rises to the level of a 162 trade or business.
- l. Whether real estate rental activities rise to the level of a trade or business remains uncertain. The Final corrected Regulations provide some guidance on this: “In determining whether a rental real estate activity is a section 162 trade or business, relevant factors might include, but are not limited to (i) the type of rented property (commercial real property versus residential property), (ii) the number of properties rented, (iii) the owner’s or the owner’s agents day-to-day involvement, (iv) the types and significance of any ancillary services provided under the lease, and (v) the terms of the lease (for example, a net lease versus a traditional lease and a short-term lease versus a long-term lease).”
- m. Landlords will have to maintain time logs for themselves and vendors. For landlords the above factors provide a non-exclusive list of some of the considerations to consider in evaluating the facts and circumstances under Code Sec. 162. Residential property, perhaps in particular a vacation home used in part by the taxpayer, may be less likely to meet the trade or business test than might a lessor of a commercial property, e.g. a warehouse. It certainly fails the safe harbor below. The number of units rented, services provided, lease terms, and other factors will be relevant. For landlords, reserving some services and perhaps even expenses may help meet the requirements. Lease terms should be reconsidered and negotiated differently if the taxpayer is willing. For example, taking a higher rent but retaining the burden of some expenses may be preferable for meeting the 162 test. Landlords whose rental endeavors are in the gray zone of uncertainty as to whether they meet the criteria of constituting a trade or business should consider maintaining a diary of each activity done. It might be better to engage in different activities on different days to increase the days for which entries are made to enhance the appearance of continuous involvement. Corroboration will be important. Perhaps a landlord should visit the rental property monthly or quarterly and take videos of the property to corroborate the site visit and review. Note that the provisions of the Final Regs below suggest that travel to and from the property are not counted. That is rather odd as many vendors charge travel time. For example, a plumber may charge travel time as well as time on the job site. Would the hours billed by an independent vendor not be counted below towards the 250?

- n. A special safe harbor has been provided to help taxpayers determine when a rental real estate enterprise may be treated as a trade or business solely for purposes of section 199A.<sup>2</sup>
- o. “Under the proposed safe harbor, a rental real estate enterprise may be treated as a trade or business for purposes of section 199A if at least 250 hours of services are performed each taxable year with respect to the enterprise. This includes services performed by owners, employees, and independent contractors and time spent on maintenance, repairs, collection of rent, payment of expenses, provision of services to tenants, and efforts to rent the property. Hours spent by any person with respect to the owner’s capacity as an investor, such as arranging financing, procuring property, reviewing financial statements or reports on operations, planning, managing, or constructing long-term capital improvements, and traveling to and from the real estate are not considered to be hours of service with respect to the enterprise. The proposed safe harbor also would require that separate books and records and separate bank accounts be maintained for the rental real estate enterprise. Property leased under a triple net lease or used by the taxpayer (including an owner or beneficiary of an RPE) as a residence for any part of the year under section 280A would not be eligible under the proposed safe harbor. A rental real estate enterprise that satisfies the proposed safe harbor may be treated as a trade or business solely for purposes of section 199A and such satisfaction does not necessarily determine whether the rental real estate activity is a section 162 trade or business. Likewise, failure to meet the proposed safe harbor would not necessarily preclude rental real estate activities from being a section 162 trade or business.”
- p. Landlords should keep diaries of services. When a contractor or agent is hired now landlords will have to have the vendor indicate not just the price but also the hours worked so that this forms a record to corroborate the 20 hours. Note that the time spent with respect to an improvement appears to be excluded from the 250-hour safe harbor count. However, with many real estate projects, how can one differentiate an improvement from a repair the time for which would appear to count towards the 250-hour safe harbor? How much patching of a parking lot may occur before it is equivalent to a capital improvement? Separate books and bank accounts may be onerous and unreasonable, even impractical for some real estate taxpayers. It is common to use a common paymaster, or one management LLC to incur and handle all maintenance and administrative costs. This is often done through one bank account to minimize paperwork. It would appear that to qualify for the safe harbor that such practices could no longer be used.
- q. The Final corrected Regulations removed the examples from the Proposed Regs might eliminate some confusion those examples caused, but no new illustrations leave open much uncertainty about the qualification of rental real estate as a trade or business.

- r. The Final corrected Regs have rules for aggregation of trades or businesses. “[The] rule also allows taxpayers to aggregate their trades or businesses with the leasing or licensing of the associated rental or intangible property if all of the requirements of proposed §1.199A-4 are met.” Note that this special rules permits the aggregation of a business and a rental activity that does not rise to the level of a Code Sec. 162 trade or business. This related party leasing rule is an exception to the general 162 definition of a trade or business adding to the layers of complexity. See also the rules for SSTBs as to aggregation that prevents an SSTB from having a related rental operation qualify for 199A. Note that under Code Sec. 469 has provisions requiring that rental to a related party, e.g. a dentist rents a building that lease payment will be characterized as active to avoid transmuting active income from the practice into passive rental income. Consider the complexity this all creates.
- s. The need to maintain separate books and records was also addressed further in the Final corrected Regulations: “...a taxpayer can use different methods of accounting for separate and distinct trades or businesses and specifies two circumstances in which trades or businesses will not be considered separate and distinct. Section 1.446-1(d)(2) provides that no trade or business will be considered separate and distinct unless a complete and separate separable set of books and records is kept for such trade or business. “Separable” suggests that separate books need not be kept so long as the records are separable. Nonetheless, given the comments on separate books and records (see above for example) consideration should be given to maintaining separate books. For a single entity to have separate trades or business they must have complete and separable books and records, meet the requirements of being able to use different methods of accounting, and that not result in income not being clearly reflected.
- t. The Final corrected Regulations prohibit treating an endeavor as a trade or business, and hence prevent a 199A deduction if 1099 reporting requirements are not met. “...taxpayers should consider the appropriateness of treating a rental activity as a trade or business for purposes of section 199A where the taxpayer does not comply with the information return filing requirements under section 6041.” Code Sec. 6041 provides in part: “(a) Payments of $600 or more. All persons engaged in a trade or business and making payment in the course of such trade or business to another person, of rent, salaries, wages, premiums, annuities, compensations, remunerations, emoluments... shall render a true and accurate return to the Secretary, under such regulations and in such form and manner and to such extent as may be prescribed by the Secretary, setting forth the amount of such gains, profits, and income, and the name and address of the recipient of such payment.” Failing to issue Forms 1099 would disqualify a trade or business that has surmounted the Code Sec. 162 trade or business definition from claiming a deduction under 199A.
- u. Disregarded entities raise issues in the application of the 199A rules. The Final corrected Regulations provide: “The proposed regulations do not address the treatment of disregarded entities for purposes of section 199A...trades or businesses conducted by a disregarded entity will be treated as conducted directly by the owner of the entity for purposes of section 199A.” Note that the trade or business of a disregarded entity will be treated as if directly operated by the owner. However, does that suggest that if rental real estate endeavors that are held in disregarded LLCs, will they be treated as conducted directly by the owner? That might be necessary in order for the aggregate of the endeavors to rise to a level of a trade or business. But if the endeavors of each LLCs rental is itself not sufficient to rise to the level of a trade or business will this “look-through” rule not be triggered? Consider the potential arbitrariness of this and other rules below. If an LLC elected to be taxed as other than a disregarded entity it would not be able to avail itself of this rule. If one developer had each property held in a separate brother-sister LLCs those would be disregarded entities and perhaps the developer would be treated as operating the properties directly by the developer. Consider a second developer using a very common structure of having a management entity that owns 1% of each property LLC so that there are multiple members and perhaps better asset protection. But now each LLC is not a disregarded entity and if the activities of each property entity do not arise to the level of a trade or business can they be aggregated? But the LLC activities would not be treated as if conducted directly by the developer for 199A purposes. ”

- v. 199A provides for harsher penalties, all of which seems rather unfair given the daunting complexity and uncertainty of the 199A rules. “Section 6662(a) provides a penalty for an underpayment of tax required to be shown on a return. Under section 6662(b), the penalty applies to the portion of any underpayment that is attributable to a substantial underpayment of income tax. Section 6662(d)(1) defines substantial understatement of tax, which is generally an understatement that exceeds the greater of 10 percent of the tax required to be shown on the return or $5,000. Section 6662(d)(1)(C) provides a special rule in the case of any taxpayer who claims the section 199A deduction for the taxable year, which requires that section 6662(d)(1)(A) is applied by substituting “5 percent” for “10 percent.” The harsher 199A application of the underpayment penalty remains so if the tax due exceeds 5% (not the general 10%) of the tax due on the return an understatement penalty may be applied. Practitioners should caution clients about this when taking positions concerning 199A that are not certain.
- w. The 50% of wages (or 25% of wages and 2.5% of UBIA) test might result in some clients restructuring business operations to enhance their 199A benefit. This should all be considered in the analysis of any estate plan as it might affect a range of planning issues. “The definition of W-2 wages includes amounts paid to officers of an S corporation and common-law employees of an individual or RPE. Amounts paid as W-2 wages to an S corporation shareholder cannot be included in the recipient’s QBI. However, these amounts are included as W-2 wages for purposes of the W-2 wage limitation to the extent that the requirements of §1.199A-2 are otherwise satisfied.” Consider whether this creates an incentive to restructure an entity as an S corporation to enhance the 199A deduction. If that is done, consider the client’s estate plan. Do current entity owners include, or might planning to secure the temporary estate tax exemption result in, trusts owning interests in the entity? If so, do those trusts meet the requirements to own S corporation stock? Does the client’s will include appropriate S corporation provisions for QSSTs and/or ESBTs? Have the disadvantages of S corporations as to refinancing, etc. been considered?”

- x. There was some uncertainty as to the treatment of property contributed to an entity in terms of determining the amount to consider for UBIA. The Final corrected Regulations provide: “...qualified property contributed to a partnership or S corporation in a nonrecognition transaction should generally retain its UBIA on the date it was first placed in service by the contributing partner or shareholder. Accordingly, §1.199A-2(c)(3)(iv) provides that, solely for the purposes of section 199A, if qualified property is acquired in a transaction described in section 168(i)(7)(B), the transferee’s UBIA in the qualified property is the same as the transferor’s UBIA in the property, decreased by the amount of money received by the transferee transferor in the transaction or increased by the amount of money paid by the transferee to acquire the property in the transaction.” Practitioners will have to obtain basis information on assets contributed to entities. This is in addition to the need to maintain separate records to reflect the 10-year minimum life for UBIA, etc. How can practitioners handle these additional recordkeeping requirements?”
- y. The Final Regs provide a more favorable rule for like kind Code Sec. 1031 exchanges generally continuing to use the UBIA of the property given up in the exchange adjusted for boot.
- z. “...section 743(b) basis adjustments should be treated as qualified property to extent the section 743(b) basis adjustment reflects an increase in the fair market value of the underlying qualified property.” This is a favorable change made in the Final Regs and will be helpful to estates, and in other circumstances. Practitioners should be mindful to address whether the governing documents for the entity involved provide the client/estate the right to require a basis adjustment. If the decedent was not a controlling partner or member there may be no ability to force the partnership to make the election absent a provision in the governing instrument.
- aa. “The preamble to the proposed regulations provides that for property acquired from a decedent and immediately placed in service, the UBIA generally will be its fair market value at the time of the decedent’s death under section 1014...The final regulations provide that for qualified property acquired from a decedent and immediately placed in service, the UBIA of the property will generally be the fair market value at the date of the decedent’s death under section 1014.” This is important for estate planning and helpful in context of the focus on basis maximization. Further, the regulations provide that a new depreciable period for the property commences as of the date of the decedent’s death.
- bb. Real estate and business aggregation rules are important for determining whether a real estate activity arises to the level of a trade or business. The Final corrected Regulations provide: “A rental real estate enterprise that meets the safe harbor described in Notice 2017-07, released concurrently with these final regulations, may also treated as trades or businesses for purposes of section 199A. Additionally, the rental or licensing of property if the property is rented or licensed to a trade or business conducted by the individual or an RPE which is commonly controlled under §1.199A- 4(b)(1)(i) is also treated as a trade or business for purposes of section 199A.” This is the exception and aggregation rule. If a developer has net leased properties that would not qualify, but a management company, would the 199A results change if the properties were overleased to the management entity then subleased to the third parties? Would the overlease meet the requirements above? In addition to these requirements, the items must be effectively connected to a trade or business within the United States as described in section 864(c).

- cc. Reasonable compensation and what wages qualify for the 50%/25% tests is important for many taxpayers. The Final corrected Regulations provide: “Section 199A(c)(4) clearly excludes reasonable compensation paid to a taxpayer by any qualified trade or business of the taxpayer for services rendered with respect to the trade or business from QBI. These amounts are attributable to a trade or business and are thus qualified items...in determining taxable income for the taxable year. In addition, reasonable compensation paid to a shareholder-employee is included as W-2 wages for purposes of the W-2 wage limitation to the extent that the requirements of §1.199A-2 are otherwise satisfied. Further, guaranteed payments and payments to independent contractors are not W-2 wages and therefore, cannot be counted for purposes of the W-2 wage limitation.” These provisions were continued from the Proposed Regs and in some instances may favor use of an S corporation so that the amount of wages can be planned, subject to requirements of reasonable compensation, to maximize the 199A deduction with consideration to the 50% or 25% of W2 wage adjustment.
- dd. Considerable uncertainty, and risk, remains for the determination of what constitutes “reasonable compensation”. The Final corrected Regulations provide: “A few commenters were concerned about whether tax return preparers would have the responsibility to closely examine whether compensation paid to a shareholder of an S corporation is reasonable before calculating the section 199A deduction, and whether tax return preparers could be subject to penalties...Providing additional guidance with respect to what constitutes reasonable compensation for a shareholder-employee of an S corporation or application or non-application of assessable penalties applicable to tax return preparers is beyond the scope of these final regulations.” Treasury refused to act in regard to this issue. Practitioners might face potential problems if clients take positions that are rejected on audit and the client incurs penalties under the tougher 199A 5% rule discussed above. What can, or should, practitioners do to protect themselves? One practical issue is that given the change in the tax dynamics some taxpayers may pay wages that differ from what was done historically. For example, a taxpayer may have paid low or no wages from an S corporation to minimize payroll taxes. Post-199A that same taxpayer may want to pay a greater wage to increase the 199A deduction with consideration to the 50%/25% wage computation. So, the new wage may not be consistent with historic wages. Might that raise the audit profile on a return? How can the disparity of historic and current wages be explained? Will taxpayers pay practitioners to document or justify the wage changes?
- ee. How income and expenses are allocated among different businesses is critical to the 199A results. The Final corrected Regulations provide: “Whether direct tracing or allocations based on gross income are reasonable methods depends on the facts and circumstances of each trade or business. Different reasonable methods may be appropriate for different items. Accordingly, the final regulations retain the rule in the proposed regulations. However, once a method is chosen for an item, it must be applied consistently with respect to that item. The Treasury Department and the IRS continue to study this issue and request additional comments, including comments with respect to potential safe harbors.”

Allocations between multiple trades or business must be consistent, made using reasonable methods, is based on facts and circumstances, clearly reflect income and expenses, and may be direct tracing or allocation by gross income. These parameters provide little practical guidance and practitioners will have to document whatever methods they use. It appears that allocations are made among “trades or businesses.” Does that mean that if a real estate rental does not rise to the level of a trade or business that allocations cannot be made?

- ff. Family attribution can be important to the determination of the 199A deduction and whether businesses can be aggregated. The Final Regulations provide: “The final regulations ...require[e]... that the same person or group of persons, directly or by attribution through sections 267(b) or 707(b), own 50 percent or more of each trade or business. A C corporation may constitute part of this group.” This broadens the attribution rules from what the Proposed Regs contained.
- gg. “To determine whether trades or businesses may be aggregated, the proposed regulations provide that multiple trades or businesses must, among other requirements, satisfy two of three listed factors, which demonstrate that the businesses are part of a larger, integrated trade or business. These factors include: (1) the businesses provide products and services that are the same (for example, a restaurant and a food truck) or customarily provided together (for example, a gas station and a car wash); (2) the businesses share facilities or share significant centralized business elements (for example, common personnel, accounting, legal, manufacturing, purchasing, human resources, or information technology resources); or (3) the businesses are operated in coordination with, or reliance on, other businesses in the aggregated group (for example, supply chain interdependencies)... this test is based on all the facts and circumstances.” This is a common theme of the Regs....fact and circumstances tests. This, while reasonable, does not provide the type of guidance practitioners would often prefer.
- hh. “...aggregation should be allowed at the entity level. Accordingly, the final regulations permit an RPE to aggregate trades or businesses it operates directly or through lower-tier RPEs.” If a subsidiary entity that holds intangible property rights licensed to the main entity does not rise to the level of a trade or business then it appears that it may not be aggregated.
- ii. The sale of insurance may avoid the taint as an SSTB “Overall the Final Regs provide valuable leniency to those selling insurance. However, insurance consultants should be careful to delineate what ancillary or other services they provide as those may be tainted as an SSTB. Perhaps the insurance and non-insurance financial related activities should be separated into different businesses. If an insurance consultant charges for time, not a commission, that revenue might be subsumed under the consulting category above or the finance category here.” Later the Final Regulations provide: “...commission-based sales of insurance policies generally will not be considered the performance of services in the field of investing and investing management for purposes of section 199A.” If a wealth adviser earns fees on investment product, e.g. 1% AUM and the adviser includes in the array of services offered estate planning and insurance planning, might that change the result? What if a financial planner charges hourly as a fee only adviser on services rendered and also sells an insurance policy? Is that something other than a purely “commission-based” fee?”

- jj. “...the final regulations provide that if a trade or business provides property or services to an SSTB and there is 50 percent or more common ownership of the trade or business, the portion of the trade or business providing property or services to the 50 percent or more commonly-owned SSTB will be treated as a separate SSTB with respect to related parties.” This is a harsh rule that makes it quite difficult for a professional tainted as an SSTB, e.g. an attorney, to have a related party lease and not have that related entity also tainted as an SSTB. Planning is still feasible, if acceptable to the taxpayer. If three attorneys who are not related jointly purchase a building and lease it to their respective practices, that would not meet the 50% common control test and would not have the rental activity tainted as an SSTB. But now, under the Final Regs. the real estate safe-harbor would have to be met and that could pose a problem in qualifying as a trade or business to obtain the 199A deduction.
- kk. ESBTs will have one threshold amount for 199A purposes. The Final Regulations provide: “an ESBT being two separate trusts for purposes of chapter 1 of subtitle A of the Code (except regarding administrative purposes), the S portion and non-S portion...Although an ESBT has separate portions, it is one trust. Therefore, in order to provide clarity, the final regulations state that the S and non-S portions of an ESBT are treated as a single trust for purposes of determining the threshold amount.” This change in the Final Regs seems reasonable and merely closes what some might have viewed as a loophole.”
- ll. There were concerns with the how the Proposed Regulations treated trusts and in particular in that they ignored the DNI deduction. The Final Regulations restored more reasonableness to this: “Multiple commenters suggested that distributions should not be counted twice in determining whether the threshold amount is met or exceeded, saying this is counter to the statute and beyond the regulatory authority of the Treasury Department and the IRS. Further, sections 651 and 661 are fundamental principles of fiduciary income taxation...The Treasury Department and IRS agree with the commenters that distributions should reduce taxable income because the trust is not taxed on that income. The final regulations remove the provision that would exclude distributions from taxable income for purposes of determining whether taxable income for a trust or estate exceeds the threshold amount. The final regulations specifically provide that for purposes of determining whether a trust or estate has taxable income that exceeds the threshold amount, the taxable income of the trust or estate is determined after taking into account any distribution deduction under sections 651 or 661.” This is a very significant and favorable change made by the Final Regs that addresses a concern raised on the Proposed Regs. Trusts will deduct distributions/DNI shifting taxable income to the beneficiaries receiving distributions. This will permit planning to spread taxable income as between a complex or non-grantor trust and the beneficiaries of that trust, perhaps enabling increasing the 199A deduction at both the trust and beneficiary level.”

- mm. Trust allocations to beneficiaries for 199A purposes remain a consideration. The Final Regulations provide: “the final regulations continue to require that a trust or estate allocates QBI (which may be a negative amount) to its beneficiaries based on the relative portions of DNI distributed to its beneficiaries or retained by the trust or estate.” The election to treat distributions after year end, the 65-day rule, as from the prior year may be important to planning.”
- nn. The Final Regulations attempt to quash the ability to use non-grantor trusts to circumvent the 199A threshold limitation and take a harsher view than the Proposed Regulations had. “The final regulations clarify that the anti-abuse rule is designed to thwart the creation of even one single trust with a principal purpose of avoiding, or using more than one, threshold amount. If such trust creation violates the rule, the trust will be aggregated with the grantor or other trusts from which it was funded for purposes of determining the threshold amount for calculating the deduction under section 199A.” The Final Regs take a more stringent view of trust used to circumvent the taxable income threshold under 199A so that even a single trust can be disregarded if it is created or funded to avoid the rule. For practitioners that created a non-grantor trust for this purpose, it should be evaluated to determine the impact.
- oo. The Final Regulations eliminate examples and discussions that the Proposed Regulations had contained concerning the use of multiple trusts to plan around the taxable income threshold for 199A purposes. The Final Regulations have deferred back to the statute, Code Sec. 643(f) on multiple trusts. “...the Treasury Department and the IRS have removed the definition of “principal purpose” and the examples illustrating this rule that had been included in the proposed regulations, and are taking under advisement whether and how these questions should be addressed in future guidance. This includes questions of whether certain terms such as “principal purpose” and “substantially identical grantors and beneficiaries” should be defined or their meaning clarified in regulations or other guidance, along with providing illustrating examples for each of these terms. Nevertheless, the position of the Treasury Department and the IRS remains that the determination of whether an arrangement involving multiple trusts is subject to treatment under section 643(f) may be made on the basis of the statute and the guidance provided regarding that provision in the legislative history of section 643(f), in the case of any arrangement involving multiple trusts entered into or modified before the effective date of these final regulations.” The examples that raised concerns, and the principal purpose test from the Proposed Regs have been eliminated in the Final Regs but practitioners have little more to rely on with respect to how multiple trusts will be treated other than the bare language of Code Section 643(f).

3. Aging and Elder Abuse Statistics.

- a. “Senior citizens may lose nearly 25 times more to scammers than what is reported, according to a report by Comparitech, a consumer research organization based in the U.K. Instead of the 200,000 cases of elder financial abuse that are reported annually to U.S. authorities, the actual number may be as high as 5 million, with losses of $27.4 billion a year, not the $1.17 billion that is officially reported, said Paul Bischoff, researcher and editor of Comparitech, which focuses on consumer issues in the United States, Canada and the United Kingdom.”
- b. ““A lot of the financial abuse is perpetrated by family members or people the elderly trust, so they are reluctant to report it; they may be ashamed they got scammed, or they may not realize it,” Bischoff said.”
- c. “Statistics on the real numbers surrounding elder financial abuse vary by organization, but experts agree it is a serious problem that is debilitating to seniors. An earlier report from the New York City Department for the Aging and Cornell University done in 2011 estimated that only one in 23 cases is reported.”
- d. “Comparitech estimated one in 10 people in the United States over the age of 65 falls victim to elder fraud in the last year. The average loss per case based on numbers reported to state Adult Protective Services organizations is $2,415.”<sup>3</sup>
- e. Practitioners in all the allied professions need to make later life planning, and planning with safeguards to minimize the risks of elder financial abuse a standard part of the planning process. Common planning steps for aging, like preparing a durable power of attorney, need to be rethought in light of these risks. What safeguards can be built in? What monitor relationships external to the document can be created for the client? Might a revocable trust with a trust protector and co-trustees provide a better set of checks and balances?
- f. “Comparitech estimates 5 million cases of elder fraud occur in the US annually resulting in $27.4 billion in losses. Elder fraud, also called elder financial abuse or elder financial exploitation, is defined as the misappropriation or abuse of financial control in a relationship where there is an expectation of trust, resulting in harm to the elderly victim. More than 200,000 scams and financial abuse cases targeting the elderly are reported to authorities every year, and most experts agree that’s just the tip of the iceberg. Our estimates show $1.17 billion in damages are reported to authorities, but the real figure likely dwarfs that amount when factoring in unreported elder fraud.”<sup>4</sup>
- g. The impact of elder financial abuse, inheritance abuse and all these matters is staggering. Traditional estate planning in many ways still seems mired in the historic view of intact families in first marriages and family loyalty that in many situations is inappropriate or simply does not exist. The common approach of naming spouse then children in age order as agents perhaps should be discussed in detail with clients along with other planning options.

4. Aging and Infirm Clients.

<sup>3</sup> Karen Demasters, “Elder Financial Abuse Much Worse Than Reported, Study Says,” Financial Adviser Online, Apr 19, 2019.

- a. Clients are aging and the incidence of elder financial abuse, and the permutations it can take, are growing as well. A recent article illustrated what appears to be a common occurrence which it dubbed “inheritance exploitation:”
- b. “After a live-in caretaker was hired to care for his mother full-time, the woman's step-son and other family members were allegedly denied access to their loved one, locked out of the family home and written out of estate planning documents that had originally named them as heirs. By the time the step-son sued for breach of fiduciary duty and financial elder abuse, the caretaker had already pocketed some $5 million, according to a lawsuit filed in the Superior Court of California in Alameda. Although the case against the caretaker was privately settled in mediation last month, the attorney for the plaintiffs, Michael Hackard, warned that cases of inheritance exploitation like this one are on the rise.”<sup>5</sup>
- c. The statistics of those potentially at risk is alarming: “The number of boomers in their 60s with living parents has risen since 1998 to about 10 million, according to an Urban Institute analysis of University of Michigan data. The Alzheimer’s Association estimates that 5.7 million Americans are living with Alzheimer’s.”<sup>6</sup>
- d. The article continues on to discuss the role that financial advisors can serve in protecting clients from elder abuse. There is no question that wealth advisers can serve a vital role in protecting clients with these challenges, but to do so more needs to be done than typically occurs. Addressing how that role can be enhanced, and the role of other advisers on the planning team, can reduce the risks of “inheritance exploitation” and elder financial abuse generally.
- e. Financial professionals can restrict distributions from accounts if they have a reasonable belief that the client/account owner is being subjected to financial exploitation under FINRA Rule 2165.<sup>7</sup> The FINRA rule also appropriately broadens the discussion to include not just elderly clients (which most articles unfortunately restrict their discussion to) but clients with other health or cognitive challenges that make them susceptible to abuse. “...the term “Specified Adult” shall mean: (A) a natural person age 65 and older; or (B) a natural person age 18 and older who the member reasonably believes has a mental or physical impairment that renders the individual unable to protect his or her own interests.”
- f. The FINRA rule permits placing a temporary hold on disbursements from the accounts of customers who are believed to be at risk. “The member [financial adviser] reasonably believes that financial exploitation of the Specified Adult has occurred, is occurring, has been attempted, or will be attempted; and The member, not later than two business days after the date that the member first placed the temporary hold on the disbursement of funds or securities, provides notification orally or in writing, which may be electronic, of the temporary hold

(2) The temporary hold authorized by this Rule will expire not later than 15 business days after the date that the member first placed the temporary hold on the disbursement of funds or securities, unless otherwise terminated or extended by a state regulator or agency of competent jurisdiction or a court of competent jurisdiction, or extended pursuant to paragraph (b)(3) of this Rule.”*

- g. To best equip a financial adviser to provide this safety net a number of prerequisites need to be addressed. The adviser must have names and contact data for trusted contact persons to reach out to. But there are many more practical steps that can be taken that too often are not addressed in the planning process. Many of these steps are non-technical practical steps that the entirety of the client’s planning team can foster. But these steps are rarely within the primary purview of any single adviser and are not the traditional planning steps most advisers take. But to combat the growing epidemic of financial abuse of elderly and infirm clients need more.
- h. Planning considerations:
  - i. The key step is changing the dialogue. There is not nearly enough focus in financial and estate planning discussions on later life planning. Nor is there the collaboration amongst different professionals robust enough to foster a true team effort in this regard.
  - ii. Many clients have many accounts scattered at many institutions. This makes each account less significant to the financial adviser at each firm. It exponentially increases the number of advisers and accounts to address making identification of an issue more difficult. To protect against elder abuse, it may be safer to consolidate accounts at one or two institutions and deepen the relationship with the adviser at the firm (or if really necessary limited numbers of firms) so that the adviser has more contact, more knowledge and hence opportunity to react to a potential elder abuse. This is a difficult or impossible task for a financial adviser to accomplish because the client may view the recommendation to consolidate accounts with that adviser as self-serving. However, if the client’s other advisers encourage consolidation (e.g. the CPA, estate planning attorney, etc.) that recommendation may have more impact.

- iii. Get a real financial plan based on a realistic budget completed by the financial adviser. That can provide a touchstone to evaluate suspect transactions. Without a budget and financial plan only the most egregious distributions might be identifiable as inappropriate. For example, a wire transfer of $100,000 to a Caribbean account pertaining to a supposed lottery winning might be identifiable in all instances. However, if a care worker or family member were to take an elderly client to the cash ATM machine several times a week and slowly pilfer money in that manner, would that be noticeable? Perhaps not without a budget to compare to historic cash withdrawals. Too many people do not address the fundamental basics of planning which are critical to protecting clients as they age or deal with other health challenges.
- iv. Automate every financial transaction feasible. If most bills are automatically charged to credit cards, credit cards automatically paid from a checking account, and deposits automatically made to the same account a number of protective benefits can be achieved. First, the number of bills, checks and other financial records that arrive by mail can be drastically reduced. That leaves less information for bad actors to abuse. Automating financial transactions reduces the amount of work necessary to pay bills and make deposits, thereby permitting more attention to be given to oversight then working in the financial weeds.
- v. Automate accounting records on a computer program, e.g. Quicken, so that a CPA or other independent or trusted person can monitor activity remotely. Consider if feasible having an independent firm, e.g. a CPA firm, handle bill pay. That provides a check and balance and independent oversight.
- vi. Encourage clients to use a more robust revocable trust in lieu of relying on a durable power of attorney. Powers of attorney often have one person named agent to act on behalf of the client. That can foster financial abuse if the agent is the person who turns out to be the bad actor. A revocable trust can offer a number of safeguards. You can incorporate co-trustees. While this can be done in a durable power of attorney (and perhaps should be) other steps can include appointing in the trust document a trust protector. This is a person, who may be designated to act in a fiduciary capacity (and under some state laws fiduciary status is the only result). The protector can be given the authority to remove and replace the trustee if anything is suspected, demand an accounting from the trustee, and more. Having a protector as a check and balance for the trustees or co-trustees can be protective. Also, consider assigning the revocable trust a separate tax identification number so that accounts are not under your Social Security number to make it more difficult for bad actors to identify the account.

- vii. Involve family and others in developing a financial and legal safety net. For example, once financial accounts have been consolidated have a consolidated statement sent to the client. This can make it easier for even a client with some degree of challenges to stay in control longer as one composite statement of all accounts with that institution can be far simpler to understand than a dozen or more different statements from different institutions. Then have a trusted family member, or if affordable, the client's independent CPA, receive duplicate copies of that statement. If a family member is named, consider naming a person who is not the agent under the client's power of attorney nor the successor trustee on the revocable trust.
- viii. If appropriate to the plan have consistency between all dispositive documents. The distributions under a will or revocable trust, if agreeable, can match the beneficiary designations under IRA and insurance policies, and so forth. That consistency sets a pattern that could be important if someone endeavoring to commit inheritance extortion or another type of financial abuse is able to have the client change an account title (e.g. to POD to the perpetrator), change a will, etc. Also, consider re-signing the will or revocable trust a few months after the initial document is signed. Add a bequest to a new charity to show that the client considered the document and made a change, but the dispositive scheme other than that remains intact. Consider having different witnesses. That too can create a history corroborating intent.
- i. Financial abuse of the elderly or infirm appears to be more rampant than statistics can ever identify. So many of these acts are difficult or impossible to identify. Determining whether an elderly mother intended to give more money to a child who claims to have been a caregiver, or whether the purported caregiver was abusing the elderly parent, are difficult to differentiate. Taking proactive steps earlier on, with a collaborative team, looking at practical not just technical implications of planning, can provide more security.

5. Asset Protection - IRA.

- a. A bankruptcy court has held that, where a taxpayer withdrew money from his IRA and rolled over part of those funds into another IRA within 60 days, then filed for bankruptcy, the rollover sum was an exempt asset.<sup>8</sup>
- b. The facts in this case are rather bizarre but illustrate the protection an IRA can afford from an asset protection perspective. The debtor took $50,000 out of his IRA, commingled the funds with his other assets, and spent $30,000 on lottery tickets (what else would you but with your IRA funds?) Within the 60-day rollover period he deposited $20,000 into another IRA. Later that year he filed for Chapter 7 bankruptcy and the Court held that the $20,000 was exempt from the reach of creditors as a rollover of his IRA. The funds did not lose their exempt status merely because the debtor took them out of his IRA. They remained a qualified retirement assets because they were rolled over in the requisite time period.

- c. Reg. Sec. 408-4(b) provides for a 60-day rollover rule and allows the funds distributed from an IRA to be paid back "from the same amount of money and any other property."

6. Assisted Suicide.

- a. New Jersey recently enacted right to die or assisted suicide legislation making New Jersey the eight jurisdiction to permit assisted suicide. This is a slowly growing trend of states enacting such legislation. The New Jersey law is reviewed below as a new development, and then a broader discussion of assisted suicide legislation follows.
- b. The preamble to the bill proposed provides insights into the right to die movement and the realities of the legislation enacted in other states.
  - i. “Recognizing New Jersey’s long-standing commitment to individual dignity, informed consent, and the fundamental right of competent adults to make health care decisions about whether to have life-prolonging medical or surgical means or procedures provided, withheld, or withdrawn, this State affirms the right of a qualified terminally ill patient, protected by appropriate safeguards, to obtain medication that the patient may choose to self-administer in order to bring about the patient’s humane and dignified death;
  - ii. Statistics from other states that have enacted laws to provide compassionate aid in dying for terminally ill patients indicate that the great majority of patients who requested medication under the laws of those states, including more than 90% of patients in Oregon since 1998 and between 72% and 86% of patients in Washington in each year since 2009, were enrolled in hospice care at the time of death, suggesting that those patients had availed themselves of available treatment and comfort care options available to them at the time they requested compassionate aid in dying;
  - iii. The public welfare requires a defined and safeguarded process in order to effectuate the purposes of this act, which will;”
- c. On April 12, 2019, New Jersey recently passed “Aid in Dying for the Terminally Ill Act.”<sup>9</sup> This will permit:
  - i. An adult, defined as 18 or older
  - ii. Resident of New Jersey. This might preclude a transfer of a patient from a state not permitting assisted suicide into New Jersey to avail herself of the New Jersey statute.
  - iii. Who is mentally capable (means having the capacity to make health care decisions and to communicate them to a health care provider, including - communication through persons familiar with the patient's manner of communicating if those persons are available).

- iv. Who is terminally ill which means that the patient is in the terminal stage of an irreversibly fatal illness, disease, or condition with a prognosis, based upon reasonable medical certainty, of a life expectancy of six months or less. A patient shall not be considered a qualified terminally ill patient until a consulting physician has: examined that patient and the patient's relevant medical records; confirmed, in writing, the attending physician's diagnosis that the patient is terminally ill; and verified that the patient is capable, is acting voluntarily, and has made an informed decision to request medication that, if prescribed, the patient may choose to self-administer.
  - v. Whose attending physician has determined to be terminally ill as defined.
  - vi. Who has made an informed decision. This means a decision by a qualified terminally ill patient to request and obtain a prescription for medication that the patient may choose to self-administer to end the patient's life in a humane and dignified manner, which is based on an appreciation of the relevant facts and after being fully informed by the attending physician of:
    - 1. The patient's medical diagnosis.
    - 2. The patient's prognosis.
    - 3. The potential risks associated with taking the medication to be prescribed;
    - 4. The probable result of taking the medication to be prescribed; and
    - 5. The feasible alternatives to taking the medication, including, but not limited to, additional treatment opportunities, palliative care, comfort care, hospice care, and pain control.
  - vii. To obtain self-administered medication to terminate her life.
- d. Time delays are built into the statute to prevent an unintended action. the patient shall make two oral requests and one written request for the medication to the patient's attending physician, subject to the following requirements:
    - i. At least 15 days shall elapse between the initial oral request and the second oral request;
    - ii. At the time the patient makes a second oral request, the attending physician shall offer the patient an opportunity to rescind the request.
    - iii. At least 15 days shall elapse between the patient's initial oral request and the writing of a prescription.
  - e. The health care agent is not authorized to make or rescind the request for such self-administered medication.
  - f. Hawaii.

- i. The “Our Care, Our Choice Act” was into law in 2018 making Hawaii the seventh U.S. jurisdiction to pass an assisted suicide statute.<sup>10</sup> The new law became effective January 1, 2019.
- g. While the phrase itself may evoke strong emotions on each side of the issue, “assisted suicide” is a concept that every practitioner must understand. When a client faces a diagnosis of a terminal illness, especially one anticipated to be rife with pain and suffering, practitioners may be called upon to engage in a conversation about the options, one of which for the client may include assisted suicide. Any advising clients as to end of life decisions should be aware of the developments in this area. As the population ages and medical technology continues to advance, the conscious decision of those with terminal conditions and severe pain and/or the loss of quality of life, to choose whether to end their lives, will sadly occur more frequently. Practitioners may for personal religious or other reasons choose not to counsel a client on pursuing assisted suicide, but knowledge of the topic may be important to that discussion and the recommendations to other advisers. But while some states have moved in the direction of permitting assisted suicide, other states have moved in the opposite direction prohibiting assisted suicide.
- h. Colorado passed Proposition 106, the End of “Life Options Act,” on November 8, 2016. This brought the number of states permitting this to a total of six. These states all permit what many refer to as “legal suicide.” Five states now have statutes that permit this: California, Colorado, Oregon, Vermont, and Washington. Montana has a court decision that is viewed as permitting similar actions.
- i. Legal suicide is when, after complying with strict procedures, a dying and suffering client may obtain prescription medication to end his or her life in a less painful manner. A few states permit this process, but only for terminally ill individuals who have less than a six-month life expectancy. Common requirements of these laws may include:
  - i. Make the request personally as the patient of your physician for self-administered aid-in-dying medication.
  - ii. Be a resident of the state permitting this. This requirement is an important part of planning that those living in other states should address, and preferably as early as possible after obtaining a diagnosis of the terminal condition.
  - iii. Be an adult, which is generally age 18 or older.
  - iv. Communicate an informed decision to health care providers. Thus, an agent under a health care proxy may not be permitted to do this for a client.
  - v. Diagnosed to have a terminal illness with a prognosis of six months or less to live.

- vi. The dire health status must be confirmed by two physicians, including the client's primary physician and a second, consulting physician.
- vii. Confirmed as being mentally capable to make this decision by two physicians. They must specifically conclude that the client understands the consequences of the decision.
- viii. Confirmation that the decision is deliberate. This is accomplished by requiring the client to make two oral requests, at least fifteen days apart, and one written request, that are specific as to what is being requested, to the client's primary physician. Clients should be encouraged to discuss these wishes in person with their physician. Regardless of your physician's response, the client should request that the physician to record the request in the client's medical record. This request should constitute the first oral request under the law. Advise the client to obtain a copy of that record (patient chart) to have proof of the request. The written request must also be witnessed by at least two other persons who meet certain requirements.
- ix. After all prerequisites are met some states require a waiting period before the prescription can be written. Some states require that a final attestation form be completed 48 hours before taking the medication to provide yet a further waiting period for the client to reconsider.
  - x. Death certificates will list the cause of death as the person's terminal illness, not physician-assisted suicide. If this is an important consideration for the client, verify that the laws of the state under consideration provide for this.
- j. If a client has been diagnosed with a terminal illness, faces the prospect of severe pain, loss of quality of life, and wishes to avail himself of the assisted suicide laws in one of these states, it may be prudent to move to a state permitting assisted suicide to have the availability of this option if chosen. That move should be made while there is capacity to effectuate establishing residency in the chosen state and to carry out the requirements above which require sufficient capacity over a period of time to corroborate understanding and intent.
- k. Be certain that the client understands and considers that this option may violate religious beliefs of the faith the client has adhered to. It may also deeply offend and upset family and friends. Encourage the client to discuss the entire matter with any religious advisers, mental health professional and others.
- l. The California, Colorado, Oregon, Vermont, and Washington Death with Dignity laws allow mentally competent, terminally-ill adult state residents to voluntarily request and receive a prescription medication so they can die in a peaceful, humane manner in a place and time of their choosing. Death with Dignity is one of many end-of-life care options available. Montana does not have a statute that codifies the right to assisted suicide. In 2009, Montana's Supreme Court ruled that there is nothing prohibiting a physician from prescribing medication to hasten the patient's death.

- m. In contrast to the discussions in the preceding section, New York held that statutes criminalizing assisted suicide are constitutional. The court determined that such restriction do not violate the due process or equal protection clauses. While the court stated that anyone, regardless of physical condition, if competent, can refuse unwanted lifesaving medical treatment that does not extend so far as to permitting assisted suicide. The court found a legitimate state purpose to guard against misuse or abuse of assisted suicide, and preserving life.
- n. A tangential issue worth noting is a case addressing an action for the “wrongful prolongation of life.”<sup>11</sup> The Koener case presented a novel question and a sensible resolution. The plaintiff’s decedent had signed a “do not resuscitate” and “do not intubate” directive at Morristown Medical Center. This was known to the hospital, her physicians, and nurses. She was 89 years old and living in an assisted living community. When undergoing a Doppler procedure at the hospital, she went into cardiac arrest. Despite the orders, she was resuscitated and lived another six months. Unfortunately, she was then intubated, had daily pain from an arthritic condition, difficulty with breathing from an end-stage lung disease, chest pain, bowel and bladder problems, depression and dementia, incidents of falling, and a stroke making it difficult to communicate, speak and eat. Defendants’ motion for summary judgment was denied, and they moved for reconsideration, claiming that the New Jersey Advance Directive for Health Care Act, N.J.S.A. 26:2H-73, immunized them when lifesaving care is administered in violation of a health care directive. In 2016, the judge, drawing on concepts found in “wrongful birth” cases, had found that a cause of action existed here for “wrongful prolongation of life.” He likewise now rejected the alleged statutory bar to the claim. The act, he noted, immunizes medical personnel and institutions from civil and criminal liability when the patient’s directive is carried out, not when it is ignored. The act protects “for actions performed in good faith and in accordance with the provisions of this act to carry out the terms of an advance directive.” (N.J.S.A. 26:2H-73(c), emphasis added). The judge found that the decedent’s rights were violated when she “lived an additional six months in a diminished condition that included unwanted pain and suffering.” The court relied on the Supreme Court’s wrongful life cases in the opinion’s extended analysis, in our view an imperfect analogy. It concluded that the decedent “had a well-established right to reject lifesaving treatment,” and that the damages for the finite period could be assessed by a jury. This right was violated, causing her pain and suffering. In this situation, the courts should provide refuge for the injured party, or, as here, her estate.
- o. Questions come to mind. What if the directives had in their extended texts a waiver of claims such as these? May the statutory absolution be contractually expanded? Would such language be given effect? Would public policy preclude it? Can next of kin override the directives and agree to indemnify the providers against claims such as these? Such issues must await later decisions; but this case appears to be a step in elucidating this expanding area of tort law

7. C Corporations.

a. Consent dividend.

- i. With the rush to C corporation status in light of the low 21% tax rate, the personal holding company (“PHC”) tax could be a significant concern for some C corporations. A recent letter ruling is relevant to those that have C corporations involved in their planning.<sup>12</sup> For many decades, until limited liability companies (“LLCs”) became popular, the use of S corporations was popular in the context of family transactions. S corporations permitted the flow through of income. However, they are subject to a number of stringent restrictions which often constrained estate planning, e.g. only specified trusts could hold S corporation stock. While C corporations may have become more popular because of the favorable tax break, that is unlikely to reduce significantly the number of S corporations involved in family estate and other plans.
- ii. First, some background on the PHC tax and some of the means to avoid it.
- iii. The personal holding company (“PHC”) tax was enacted decades ago, at a time when the marginal corporate tax rate was well below the individual marginal income tax rate. The purpose was to prevent taxpayers from accumulating income inside a C corporation at a lower tax rate. The PHC tax had remained academic for many years because the corporate tax rates exceeded those applicable to individuals. The 2017 tax act flipped the relationship of corporate and individual tax rates with the well publicized 21% corporate tax rate. The result of this was that that perhaps near forgotten PHC tax again became relevant. As a result of the new relationship between the maximum individual rate at 37% (or 40.8% if the 3.8% NIIT is considered) and the maximum corporate of 21% there is now a significant incentive to hold cash and investment assets inside a C corporation rather than distribute them. Many taxpayers have modified existing entities into C corporations or have created them. One risk of using C corporations in this manner is the exposure to the PHC tax.
- iv. The tax is assessed under IRC Sec. 541, which provides: “541 - Imposition of personal holding company tax -In addition to other taxes imposed by this chapter, there is hereby imposed for each taxable year on the undistributed personal holding company income (as defined in IRC Sec. 545) of every personal holding company (as defined in IRC Sec. 542) a personal holding company tax equal to 20 percent of the undistributed personal holding company income.”

- v. The aggregate of the 20% PHC rate and the regular corporate rate of 21% is 41%, hardly a significant penalty (unless the double tax on distributions to shareholders from the C corporation are factored into the analysis).
- vi. Personal holding company income (“PHCI”) is determined by taking specified deductions from the C corporation’s income. PHCI may include the following (but there are a host of exception and special rules): dividends, rents, mineral, oil and gas royalties, amounts received from contracts for personal services, income reported by a corporate beneficiary of an estate or trust, etc.
- vii. A personal holding company must meet an income and ownership test. The income test requires that PHCI comprises 60% or more of its adjusted ordinary gross income for the year. The ownership test requires that for the last half of the tax year more than 50% of the stock is owned directly or indirectly by five or fewer individuals. Constructive ownership rules apply. IRC Sec. 544. These will attribute to a particular shareholder shares in the C corporation that are owned by controlled entities, etc.
- viii. So, if a C corporation passes the income and ownership test it could be subject to an additional 20% tax. So, planning can be done to avoid or fail the ownership or income test. For example, a C corporation could buy a business that produces significant gross income to enable the post-sale corporation to fail the 60% of income test. But what if a C corporation meets both tests. Can something be done to avoid paying the additional 20% PHC tax? Yes, the corporation may be able to pay a dividend to its shareholders to avoid the penalty tax. More specifically, the PHC can pay what is known as a “deficiency dividend” and avoid the PHC tax. IRC Sec. 547.
- ix. The recent ruling pertained to this process. In the Private Letter Ruling the IRS granted a C corporation an extension on the period of time during which it could make the election to pay a consent dividend and avoid the PHC tax.
- x. The IRS granted the C corporation a 60-day extension to make the election for a consent dividend under Code Section 565. The rationale for the leniency was that the corporation made reasonably good faith reliance on its accountant who had not properly advised it. The accountant had evaluated the corporation’s (PHC tax at the consolidated return level and concluded that PHC tax did not apply. The accountant also failed to advise the taxpayer that it was necessary to make the consent dividend election.
- xi. The election is made by filing with the Form 1120 “U.S. Corporation Income Tax Return:”
  1. Schedule PH.
  2. Form 972 – “Consent of Shareholder to Include Specific Amount in Gross Income”.

3. Form 973 – “Corporation Claim for Deduction for Consent Dividends.”

2. Charity – Post-Death Valuation of Donation.

- a. What value should be placed on charitable bequests? A recent case addressed this issue, and an article in the literature raised some important questions about the finding in the case. Before addressing the case some background on valuation considerations will be presented.
- b. The value of property donated to charity should be based on its fair market value which is often determined by appraisal. A not uncommon valuation issue is what happens when the valuation obtained is altered or contradicted by later events. In the case of estate tax valuations, for charitable purposes or otherwise, what is the impact of post death events?
- c. In valuing estate assets practitioners need to be cautious concerning post death sales. In the estate of Noble the Court held that a post death sale of a closely held stock position was determinative of the value of the stock on the decedent's estate tax return.<sup>13</sup> In contrast another case reached the opposite result.<sup>14</sup> In another case, the valuation of property that comprised a charitable deduction considered post-death events.<sup>15</sup>
- d. A recent case considered the impact of post-death events on the determination of an estate tax charitable contribution deduction finding that the post-death events should be applied to modify the valuation determined at the date of death.<sup>16</sup> The Dieringer v. Com'r, case was initially decided by the Tax Court in 2016 and was recently affirmed by the Ninth Circuit.
- e. Stock in a closely held business was bequeathed to a charitable foundation. An appraisal was obtained as of the decedent's date of death.
- f. After the decedent's death, another appraisal was completed and the decedent's shares were redeemed by the company. In the post-death appraisal, the appraiser was instructed to consider minority interest and other discounts that might affect the decedent's shares, and those were determined by the appraiser to be substantial. While the estate claimed a charitable contribution, deduction based on the date of death value the Court held that the post-death events had to be considered and a lower value had to therefore be used for the contribution.
- g. A charitable contribution deduction cannot exceed the value of the property received by the charity. While that is generally determined based on the value of the property included in the decedent's gross estate at the date of death, that is not always the case.
- h. Similar to the facts in other recent cases that have been resolved unfavorably to the taxpayer, in the instant case the decedent's son was executor, trustee of her trust, trustee of the foundation, and a shareholder and officer in the company. In those capacities he controlled all sides of the transaction and orchestrated a redemption based on a valuation reflecting a minority discount, but claimed a charitable contribution on a valuation not reflecting a discount.

- i. An accuracy related penalty was imposed and upheld by the Court.
- j. The estate tax charitable deduction was reduced to the price at which stock specifically bequeathed to the private foundation was subsequently redeemed by the family's closely held business. The stock redemption price was determined based upon the application of multiple valuation discounts. While the tax result of the case was a substantial reduction in the originally claimed estate tax charitable deduction, the economic result was that the foundation received much less value than it would have received had the redemption never occurred. Commentators have questioned a number of aspects of this case including the liability of the foundation for selling shares at a discount and the control the key persons exercised over all aspects of the transactions.<sup>17</sup>

8. Charity – 501(c)(4).

- a. 501(c)(4) organizations provide interesting planning opportunities. Before examining a recent case addressing a (c)(4), first some background on these unusual organizations will be considered.
- b. A 501(c)(4) organization is defined as civic leagues etc. operated exclusively for social welfare. 501(c)(4) are organizations which are not organized for profit, and which are organized solely for the promotion of the public welfare.
- c. 501(c)(4)s are allowed to promote in political actions so long as that is not their "primary purpose". What constitutes political campaign intervention, and what is the threshold for the amount of intervention that can be performed before it becomes the corporations "primary purpose" and therefore become a violation is not clear. The IRS uses a facts and circumstances test to determine if an action is considered political activity- but that test remains vague and open to interpretation and has come under criticism.
- d. An organization is operated exclusively for the promotion of social welfare if it is "primarily engaged" in promoting the common good and general welfare of the community.<sup>18</sup> Advocating for a particular social issue by sending mailings and paying for advertising can be an acceptable social welfare activity. But direct involvement in political matters is not.<sup>19</sup>
- e. In a recent case the IRS denied recognition of an organization as a Code Sec. 501(c)(4) social welfare organization. The Court held that the organization did not

- f. A Code Sec. 501(c)(4) organization that spends funds to influence the selection, nomination, election, or appointment of any individual to any federal, state, or local public office is subject to income tax. The tax is based on the lower of the amount spent on these purposes or the investment income the organization earned in the year.<sup>21</sup>
- g. The IRS has provided guidance on the income tax implications of such political campaign activity.<sup>22</sup> IRS uses a similar "facts and circumstances" test to determine if an applicant seeking tax-exempt status under Code Sec. 501(c)(4) is primarily a social welfare organization that will qualify, or if instead the organization is excessively involved in political campaign matters so that it should not qualify.
- h. Factors that the IRS might consider as indicating political activity include the following:
  - a. The communication identifies a public candidate.
  - b. The timing of the communication coincides with an election.
  - c. The communication targets voters in a particular election;
  - d. The communication is not part of an ongoing series of substantially similar advocacy communications by the organization on the same issue.
- i. Factors that the IRS might consider as indicating social welfare activity include the following:
  - a. The communication identifies specific legislation outside the control of the organization, that it is trying to influence.
  - b. The communication identifies the candidate solely as a government official who can act on the public policy issue.
  - c. The communication identifies the candidate solely in the list of key or principal sponsors of the legislation.
- j. The facts in the instant case in brief were as follows. Freedom Path applied for recognition as a social welfare group under Code Sec. 501(c)(4). The IRS concluded that many of the organization's communications were political campaign activities and that it was not being operated primarily for the promotion of social welfare. The IRS denied the application based on a facts and circumstances analysis of the organization's advertisements and other documents. The organization challenged Rev. Rul. 2004-6 as so vague and inhibiting of its First Amendment rights that it was unconstitutional.
- k. The district court held that Rev. Rul. 2004-6 was not unconstitutional. The organization appealed to the Fifth Circuit which concluded that the organization did not have standing to bring the suit so that it did not address the merits of the challenge.

9. Charity – House Donation.

a. Overview.

- i. This rather detailed case is quite fact specific but offers valuable lessons on several important charitable giving topics that have much wider applicability. There is a detailed discussion of what is required in a qualified appraisal, with a number of points of what not to do in an appraisal for a charitable donation if you want it to be respected. Another key issue was the receipt of quid-quo-pro benefit that disallowed a portion of the taxpayer's hoped for deduction. There is also a discussion of the rules on donations of a partial interest that stress the importance of understanding applicable state law. These are all valuable lessons for donors, advisers and charities alike.<sup>23</sup>

b. Facts Generally.

- ii. Taxpayers donated a house, personal property in the house, and cash to a charity, Second Chance, Inc.
- iii. In April 2011, the taxpayers purchased real property which included a remodeled house in good condition. Later, they identified defects with the house and sought to have it demolished so they could build a new house on the property.
- iv. Taxpayers hired a builder to demolish the house and to build a new residence. Prior to the demolition, the taxpayer contacted the charity about donating the house. The charity takes apart homes, salvages building materials, fixtures, and furniture and thereby provide employment to the disadvantaged and training. On December 1, 2011 the taxpayer signed a contract with charity for this work in deconstructing their house.
- v. The charity advised the taxpayer that they could claim an income tax deduction for the value, as determined by a qualified appraiser, of the salvaged property that was received by the charity's warehouse.
- vi. The taxpayers were also supposed to donate $20,000 in cash to the charity to offset the charities anticipated costs of the project.
- vii. The taxpayers hired appraisers to value the house and personal property. The appraiser used a sales comparison approach to value the house based on its highest use which the appraiser determined was based on keeping the house intact and moving it to another site for use as a residence. A second appraisal was premised on a conveyance of the entire house to the charity and used the estimated cost to reconstruct the house to determine value.
- viii. On December 1, 2011 the taxpayer signed an agreement with the charity conveying all of her rights, title, and interest in "the improvements, building and fixtures located on the Premises" to the charity. There is no evidence that this agreement was recorded.

- ix. The charity estimated that the deconstruction of the house would yield items with a fair market value of at least $150,000, but kept no records, as it had indicated it would, of the salvaged items.
  - x. On their 2011 tax return the taxpayers deducted $675,000 which was the appraised fair market value of the house as a residence to be used intact at another location. When the IRS rejected that deduction amount, the taxpayers re-filed their 2011 tax return claiming a $313,353 deduction, based on the appraised deconstructed value of the house as calculated in their second appraisal based on the cost to build the house.
- k. Partial interest issue.
- i. The IRS went further and asserted that no deduction of any amount was permitted under Code Section 170 for a partial interest in a house. The taxpayers asserted that they had donated a discrete and separable interest in the house.
  - ii. The determination as to whether the interest donated is the taxpayer's entire interest and hence deductible, or rather is a partial interest and not deductible, is a question of federal law but the answer to may depend on state law property rights.<sup>24</sup>
  - iii. State law in this case provides that recorded ownership is what governs the determination of who owns an interest in real property. So, the contract the taxpayer signed with the charity, because it was not recorded, did not satisfy this requirement. So, while the taxpayer could sever the ownership of the house from the land to have donated an entire interest in that severed interest in the house, because it was not recorded that severance did not occur. So, the court viewed the taxpayer's donation as comparable to the taxpayer having given a mere license to the charity to use the house for salvage and training. This was merely a partial interest in the property and did not qualify under Code Sec. 170 as a charitable contribution.
- l. Appraisal issues.
- i. The IRS also took issue with the amounts the taxpayers had tried to claim for the donation. The property to be donated was not moved to a new location and used as a house which the first appraisal presumed. Instead, the property was dismantled as part of a training exercise so only salvage value remained. The IRS analogized the case to another case where a taxpayer donated a house to the fire department to burn down as part of a training exercise. In that case the taxpayer tried to value the donation as the difference in the value of property as the value of the land with the house and the value of only the land. The Court held that was incorrect since the house was burned down as a condition of the donation, and that fact had to be considered.<sup>25</sup>

- ii. The second appraisal obtained by the taxpayers did not fare much better than the first. The Court held that since the deconstruction process would necessarily destroy components of the house only those that remained after the training exercise was complete could be valued for donation purposes. That would be more than a house donated to a fire department to be burned down, but less than the value of reconstructing the house as the appraiser had assumed.
- iii. The IRS also denied the taxpayer's deduction for the donation of personal property in the house because the appraisal was deficient. Any donation of non-marketable property of more than $5,000 must be accompanied by a qualified appraisal. Code Sec. 170(f)(11). A qualified appraisal must specify the valuation approach used. The taxpayer's appraisal did not indicate the specific methodology used for appraising each item. It only provided fair-market values for several items. The appraisal indicated that the values should be reduced by costs incurred and estimated depreciation but only did so in a haphazard manner.
- c. Donations should be offset by benefit received.
  - i. The IRS further attacked the taxpayer's deductions on the basis that they received a benefit, or quid quo pro, for the purported donation. The benefit was that the charity demolished the house which they not only wanted demolished, but for which they consulted with a builder about demolishing it before arranging with the charity to do so.
  - ii. The Court held that the taxpayers gave a required cash contribution to the charity in order to secure the charity's agreement to accept its donation of the house and its contents. The court did not find that the taxpayer's did so not to secure some tangible goods or service in return, but to secure the ability to donate to a charitable cause and to obtain a tax deduction, which is not a specific benefit negating the deduction. The IRS argued that the benefit of the cash donation was the deconstruction of the house. But the Court reasoned that the taxpayers had already executed agreements transferring ownership of the house to the charity so that the deconstruction benefited the charity not the taxpayers. The Court also found in the instant case the taxpayer did not avoid all demolition costs as a result of the arrangement with the charity.

10. Charity – Conservation Easement.

- a. A deduction for a conservation easement was denied.<sup>26</sup>

11. Charity – Private Foundation Self-Dealing.

- a. The Code imposes an excise tax on certain acts of self-dealing, between a private foundation and disqualified persons.<sup>27</sup> Taxpayers with private foundations that have not been as careful as perhaps they should have been in operating the foundation in strict conformity with the tax requirements should review foundation activities with their advisers and be proactive about correcting any issues. The lists below might well indicate that the IRS has identified common foundation problems and is looking to identify other taxpayers violating the rules.

- b. A self-dealing transaction must be corrected. This includes filing Form 4720 – “Return of Certain Excise Taxes on Charities and Other Persons Under Chapters 41 and 42 of the IRC,” and the required excise tax must be paid.
- c. Hot button issues to be considered with respect to private foundations and disqualified persons include the following:
  - i. A self-dealing transaction occurred, but no Form 4720 was filed.
  - ii. Loans were made from the foundation to a disqualified person.
  - iii. The foundation's property was used by a disqualified person.
- d. The IRS has set forth rules taxpayers should follow to correct a self-dealing transaction.<sup>28</sup> It has also provided the following guidance for its auditors for identifying self-dealing transactions:
- e. The IRS has suggested several audit tips to be followed by agents examining possible self-dealing transactions. These include:
  - i. Investigate records of the private foundation to identify transactions between the foundation and disqualified.
  - ii. Review contracts, meeting minutes, interviews, personnel and payroll records to identify such transactions.
  - iii. Review balance sheets.
  - iv. Review assets listings and depreciation schedules.
  - v. Determine the location of all assets, even fully depreciated ones, and identify who is using them.
  - vi. If the foundation owns real property determine whether disqualified persons might be using it for hunting or other personal uses.
  - vii. If there are fully depreciated vehicles might a disqualified person be using one?
  - viii. If the foundation owns artwork confirm where it is listed as being held on the foundation's books (e.g., in "storage") and also determine where it is actually being held. Might art be in a disqualified person's residence or business?
  - ix. If fully depreciated assets were disposed of determine if they still had value. How and to whom were they disposed of? Were they given to a disqualified person?
  - x. Tour buildings and real estate assets to determine how and who is using them. Might a disqualified person be using it?
  - xi. Review rental agreements, sales contracts, agreements, etc. Be alert for “side deals” between a foundation and a disqualified person.

12. Charity - Remuneration.

- a. The IRS issued guidance on excess remuneration paid by exempt organizations.<sup>29</sup>

13. Clawback of Temporary Exemption.

- a. Regulations were issued confirming that a taxpayer's use of the temporarily enhanced gift tax exemption will not result in a recapture or clawback when the exemption declines.<sup>30</sup>
- b. These Regulations provide favorable results assuring no clawback of the current high temporary exemption if it is used.
- c. In computing the amount of Federal gift tax to be paid on a gift or the amount of Federal estate tax to be paid at death, the gift and estate tax provisions apply a unified rate schedule to the taxpayer's cumulative taxable gifts and taxable estate on death to arrive at a net tentative tax. The net tentative tax then is reduced by a credit based on the applicable exclusion amount ("AEA"), which is the sum of the basic exclusion amount ("BEA") under Code Sec. 2010(c)(3) and, if applicable, the deceased spousal unused exclusion ("DSUE") under Code Sec. 2010(c)(4).
- d. What is the manner in which the calculations will be made to avoid a clawback? Start with gross estate inclusive of adjusted taxable gifts. Calculate a tentative estate tax. Subtract a hypothetical gift tax (using rates in effect at the date of death) but using the basic exclusion amount ("BEA") at the time of the gift. That was $11.4 million. Subtract deductions, calculate estate tax due and apply credits. Most would have thought the issue was how the gift tax was calculated, but the proposed Regs address this at the last stage of the calculation. Use the higher of the BEA that applied at the time the gifts were made, or at the time of death.
- e. Example: The taxpayer makes a $9 million gift sheltered by the gift tax exemption in 2019. The taxpayer then dies after 2025 when the exclusion has dropped to $5M inflation indexed. Use the BEA to determine how much estate tax credit the estate is to receive. This is the BEA used in determining the gift exclusion at the time the gift was made, which was $9 million or the BEA at death. So, assume BEA is $9 million and prevents decedent from paying estate tax on a gift made when exclusion was higher.
- f. The "off the top" gift tax issue was negatively resolved. Assume that a taxpayer makes a gift of $5M in 2019 and makes no further gifts. If the taxpayer dies after 2025 and the enhanced exclusion no longer provides benefit. Some had speculated that gift would have been made off the top of the exclusion amount would possibly have left the remaining exclusion intact, but that was not addressed in the proposed Regulation and it appears the intent was to negate the ability to make a gift of the top portion of the exclusion (i.e. the temporarily enhanced exclusion) and retaining intact (i.e., intact after the reduction in the exclusion amount) the remaining exclusion. This does not seem feasible. The fact that a bottom tier of exemption may not be preserved suggests that taxpayers who cannot afford to make sufficient gifts to use both spouse's full exemptions, might instead consider the merits of having just one spouse use all of his or her exemption and have the other spouse retain his or her entire exemption intact. This one-spouse-gifts approach might for some clients provide a net better result.

- g. What if wife died during period of higher exemption, e.g. in 2019, and the surviving husband calculated his DSUE off that larger amount? Thereafter the surviving spouse dies after exclusion has declined. Does the surviving spouse on death get the DSUE based on the larger amount that existed with the first spouse died? Should be the DSUE calculated at the time of the first spouse's death? Yes, so the surviving spouse should obtain the benefit of the larger DSUE (i.e., based on the temporary high exemption that existed when the first spouse to die passed).
- h. The fact that the clawback issue has been resolved should serve as a strong incentive for "moderate wealth clients ("moderate" relative to the current high exemptions) should be encouraged to plan now, certainly before 2026 when the exception is going to decline, but perhaps even before the 2020 election. If the "blue wave" of the 2018 mid-term election continues, the exemption amount could be reduced before the 2026 scheduled halving of the exclusion. For example, the estate tax proposal by Bernie Sanders proposed a mere $1 million gift exemption and a $3.5 million estate tax exemption, much less than the 2026 anticipated reduction. Practitioners should proactively educate and encourage clients to plan and hopefully avoid a repeat of the 2012 deluge of clients trying to get planning done just prior to a possible change in the exemption. Also, consider more robust planning than many executed in 2012. Gifts should not only be made in trust and not outright, but for many clients to trusts that they can access such as non-reciprocal spousal lifetime access trusts or domestic asset protection trusts. See comments below concerning the Wacker case and the reciprocal trust doctrine.
- i. This Regulations begs the questions for many clients "what are you waiting for?" With the risks to the estate tax of the so-called Blue Wave continuing in 2020, and the proposal made by Senator Bernie Sanders (discussed later in this monograph) clients of even "moderate" wealth should be investigating transfers to reduce their estate now.

thereof (Effective from passage):

- i. (2) (A) For a nonresident estate, the state shall have the power to levy the estate tax upon all real property situated in this state and tangible personal property having an actual situs in this state.
  - ii. (B) For real property and tangible personal property owned by a pass-through entity, the entity shall be disregarded for estate tax purposes and such property shall be treated as personally owned by the decedent if (i) the entity does not actively carry on a business for the purpose of profit and gain, (ii) the ownership of the property by the entity was not for a valid business purpose, or (iii) the property was acquired by other than a bona fide sale for full and adequate consideration and the decedent retained a power with respect to or interest in the property that would bring the real property situated in this state or the tangible personal property having an actual situs in the state within the decedent's federal gross estate. For purposes of this subparagraph, "pass-through entity" means a partnership or an S corporation, as those terms are defined in section 12-699, or a single member limited liability company that is disregarded for federal income tax purposes.
  - iii. (C) The state is permitted to calculate the estate tax and levy said tax
  - iv. to the fullest extent permitted by the Constitution of the United States."
- c. The concept of disregarding partnership or other pass through entities to tax real estate is an expansion of Connecticut's ability to tax real and tangible property of non-residents for estate tax purposes. Other states have similar provisions to pierce entities that hold real estate.
  - d. For many years it appeared as if the trend were for states to reduce or eliminate state estate taxes but that trend may be reversing with Connecticut, New York and California (see other updates in this article) moving in the opposite direction. This, as pointed out in the discussion of Sanders estate tax proposal, may be part of a movement overall towards more restrictive and costly estate taxes reversing the recent trends on both federal and state levels.

16. Decanting.

- a. Decanting has become so popular and talked about that it is almost surprising to see a case challenge an attempt to decant. It shouldn't be. It is not uncommon that once a planning technique takes hold clients will push the edges seeking to expand the scope of what is possible.
- b. In a recent Nevada, the Court considered a district court order granting a motion to decant half of a trust's assets from a charitable trust into a new charitable trust. The Nevada Supreme Court reversed the order denying the right to decant. The facts in the case included that the trust instrument required unanimous vote of the trustees to make a distribution. Only one of the two co-trustees wanted to decant 50% of the trust into a new trust. That new post-decanting trust would continue the purpose of the transferor trust but just one trustee as the sole trustee. The transferor trust would retain 50% of the assets and have the other co-trustee solely in charge. The court determined that the requirement of the governing instrument for both trustees to agree had to be met.<sup>33</sup>

17. Estate Tax Proposal – Bernie Sanders.

- a. However, the “theme” of the Sanders tax proposal above, Warren's proposal, the California consideration of enacting an estate tax with a $3.5 million exemption, New York enacting a mansion or millionaires tax, and so on, might start to all suggest a pattern that practitioners should be aware of and proactively advise clients to plan for.
- b. Congressman Bernie Sanders' proposed tax act, entitled “For the 99.8 Percent Act,” S. 309 116th Cong. (2019) (the “Act”) should concern everyone with wealth and their advisers.<sup>34</sup> While few, if any, believe the estate tax bill proposed by Sanders could be enacted with the current Trump White House and a Republican Congress, practitioners should take heed of the intent behind the proposals made in the Act. While one might dismiss this as mere electioneering by Sanders, be careful as this proposal might be a glimpse as to what could occur if the so-called Blue Wave (that is, the Democrats winning both Houses of Congress and the White House) from the 2018 mid-term elections continues through the 2020 election.
- c. Why Practitioners Should Care.

<sup>34</sup> Shenkman, Tietz, and Blattmachr, “Bernie Sanders Estate Tax Proposal: Might it Foreshadow Future Dem Proposals?” Leimberg Information Services, Inc. April ___, 2019.

- a. While there may currently be a Federal estate tax and gift tax exemption of $10 million inflation adjusted (currently $11.4 million in 2019) that does not mean practitioners should be unconcerned with planning for clients with lower level of value of assets than the current exemption. The Act proposes a dramatic reduction in the exemption and restriction or elimination of several of the most powerful planning tools in an estate planners arsenal.
- b. Some ultra-wealthy clients have appeared to plan with renewed vigor since it became clear that President Trump was unable to repeal the estate tax. In contrast, many moderate wealth clients (“moderate” relative to the current exemptions) say in the $5 million to perhaps $40 million wealth range, appear to have neglected planning as not really relevant to them. That could prove a costly mistake depending on the outcome of the 2020 election. Is it really worth the risk? Most clients do not find dealing with estate planning particularly enjoyable, so practitioners must educate them as to the risks this mere Sanders’ proposal that is unlikely to get enacted may mean for their future. It is relatively simple and inexpensive for a married couple to create, for example, non-reciprocal SLATs and make gifts of, perhaps, $10 million each under current tax law. If legislation similar to Sanders proposal is enacted as a result of a Democratic sweep in 2020, the same couple might face a daunting task to shift wealth, and the cost of doing so could be dramatically greater. Even if a client guesstimates only a 10% likelihood of both events occurring (a Democratic sweep and a Sanders-like estate tax change being enacted), isn’t it worthwhile to plan and avoid that risk? Modern trust planning techniques provide an array of options to permit a client to benefit from assets transferred to completed gift trusts that can use exemption. These include: DAPTs, hybrid-DAPTs where someone in a non-fiduciary capacity can name the settlor as a beneficiary, special powers of appointment to direct a trustee to make a distribution to the settlor, variations of non-reciprocal SLATs, loan powers, floating spouse-clauses, etc. If clients can have access to the assets transferred, what is the impediment to proceed with planning in light of the risks posed by Sanders proposal? Other than the cost of the planning, there may be no substantive downside of planning now versus waiting and facing a potentially dramatically more limited planning regime? In fact, because effective estate tax planning although always requires assets be removed from claims of the client, this planning may benefit him or her, as well as his or her family. That may be a calculus many moderate wealth clients have viewed quite differently with the current high exemptions. But that perspective should be reexamined.
- d. Overview of Sander’s Proposed Act.

- c. Senator Sanders proposed a tremendous increase in the estate tax, with the Act reducing the Federal estate tax exemption from the current $11.4 million to the $3.5 million level that existed in 2009. Some have argued to make it even smaller. The Act would also impinge upon the ability of clients to make lifetime gifts, reducing the lifetime (gift tax) exemption to a “mere” $1 million. For those in the moderate wealth range, considered in this case to be $3 million + this could be significant and a dramatic change from the current planning environment. For the wealthy the dollar value of the exemption is critical. Too many wealthy clients, however, have been adopting a “wait and see” planning tactic, choosing to sit back and rely on the high current $11.4 million per person exemption, assuming the exemption as making the estate tax irrelevant to them. Sanders’ announcement and the provisions of the Act should be a wakeup call for those clients, as well as for practitioners. It should be a call to action for clients to use their exemptions and use it wisely (discussed below), before it disappears even faster than it was slated to do so under the Tax Cuts of Jobs Act of 2017 (reducing by half to $5 million, inflation adjusted, in 2026) if there is a sufficient Democratic shift in Washington.
- d. Senator Sanders also proposed in the Act raising the estate tax rates with a maximum rate of 77% for estates over $1 billion. As a perspective, do not view that as too radical as that was the rate on estates above $10 million until 1977. For the uber wealthy, the marginal rate is the biggest fear as at high wealth levels the exemption becomes rather insignificant. At that level of wealth, estate planning has never really been only about the exemption, as even the current high amounts are relatively insignificant to the very wealthy. The marginal estate tax rate is really critical in terms of the estate tax pain felt by these clients.
- e. The proposed changes are much tougher on clients than just the lower exemptions and the rate increases may indicate. Sanders’ changes include restrictions on the use of valuation discounts, grantor retained annuity trusts (“GRATs”), and more techniques that have been the grease for many estate plans completed up to this point. The proposed restrictions on planning techniques may have an incredibly negative impact on the ability of very wealthy taxpayers to shift wealth to future generations without significant wealth transfer tax. So, the clients at this level of wealth should really be planning with vigor and not wait to see what might occur in 2020 or beyond. If one opts to wait, clients and practitioners might face a scenario similar to the end of 2012. There was considerable worry at the end of 2012 that the estate tax exemption would drop from $5 million to $1 million in 2013. Taxpayers lined up outside their planners’ offices hoping to get work done in time. Due to waiting until it was almost too late, some taxpayers had too little time to consider the implications of planning. In addition, compressed 2012 planning schedules increased the risk of causing step-transaction doctrine issues because there often could not be much time between different actions or transfers. The 2012 rush resulting in some cases where planning that really didn't serve the client's needs as they might have hoped was created, as there just wasn't enough time for clients to absorb ideas or planners to compete forecasts or other steps a calmer planning schedule would have permitted. Also, if you wait to the last minute, what if there is a Democratic victory and the effective date of new tax legislation is so soon after the election that it precludes clients from completing any of the planning they wish to do? Consider the effective dates of Sanders' proposed changes to the estate tax rules, which are proposed to be effective for anyone dying after December 31, 2019. Wait and see might be the strategy most clients wish to employ, but it could also be a costly mistake.

e. Again, Why Wait?

f. With modern trust drafting techniques, practitioners can craft plans that allow clients to have the ability to perhaps benefit in some manner from assets transferred out of their estates. This might include in the use of non-reciprocal spousal lifetime access trusts), some control over investments in a fiduciary capacity (as the investment advisor of a directed trust), and other steps that traditional trust drafting which was less flexible did not afford. So, pose the question to your clients: why wait?

f. How Sanders' Act Would Change Planning.

g. Here are some of the changes in the Act and what they might mean to planning if some variation of each change is enacted:

h. Exemption: The proposed $3.5 million exemption would greatly reduce the ability of wealthy people to shift wealth out of their estates, or into protective structures that may limit the reach of divorcing spouses or claimants. This might mean that there is a great advantage for clients to using the current $11.4 million exemption now, or as much of it as possible, before a change is enacted. For clients of moderate wealth ("moderate" relative to the current exemption amount) consider that they might be able to make a simple gift to a trust to accomplish much of the asset protection, estate tax planning, succession planning and other goals that client has. Waiting might necessitate the use of much more costly and complex planning, and some of those same techniques are also curtailed under the Act as proposed.

i. Example: Doctor Jane has $6 million in savings, $1 million in a house and $2 million in a retirement plan. As a surgeon she is worried about malpractice risks. She is also concerned about what might change with the estate tax rules if the political winds blow in another direction. She would like to remove $5 million from the reach of claimants and the estate tax. If she created a self-settled domestic asset protection trust ("DAPT") today she can gift $5 million to the trust by transferring securities (e.g., ACAT, using the Automated Customer Account Transfer system) securities to her new trust, and signing any documents needed to confirm the gift being made. If the exemption drops to $3.5 million that would limit what could be transferred to the trust, and the excess above $3.5 million would be more difficult to transfer given the other restrictive changes proposed in the Act. It might no longer be practical to do so at that point. So why wait?

- j. Credit Shelter Trusts and One-Fund QTIP Trusts: Years ago, the default or common estate plan for married couples might have been to fund a credit shelter trust to the largest amount that would not generate a state or federal estate tax. As the exemption grew the default plan for married couples evolved to a so-called one-fund QTIP that might have provided the surviving spouse the right to disclaim into a family trust, or perhaps gave an independent (according to some views) executor the right to elect the portion of the QTIP qualifying for the marital deduction thereby shifting funds to a credit shelter trust. A drop in the exemption to a $3.5 million level might suggest that reverting back to the historic default plan may prove better for many clients.
- k. Credit Shelter Basis Planning Risk: Practitioners have been helping advise and guide clients on terminating credit shelter trusts, or distributing appreciated assets out of a credit shelter trust to garner a basis step up on the death of the surviving spouse. If a Sanders type bill is enacted after the 2020 election that could prove a costly mistake. While terminating or distributing assets out of a credit shelter trust to gain a basis step up might be advantageous with an $11.4 million exemption it could prove to be a very costly gambit if the surviving spouse dies after the exemption drops.
- l. Gift Exemption: As mentioned above, the Act also would reduce the gift tax exemption (how much you can gift during your lifetime without a current gift tax) to a mere $1 million. That would inhibit a lot of the common planning techniques practitioners use today.
- m. Clawback:
  - i. It seems that the Bill is attempting to honor any prior use of the unified credit, even though the credit would be significantly reduced under the Bill. The Act might propose that if a client make gifts this year to use their current high $11.4 million exemption, there will be a penalty for that with the gifts “clawed” back into their tax calculation. If that were to be enacted, it might already be too late to plan. Again, while few if any practitioners believe that the Act will be passed with a Republican Senate and Presidency, the changes proposed, like these gift tax changes, would radically restrict planning. This clawback proposal, if this is the correct interpretation, is important to communicate to clients.
  - ii. The question of whether the Sanders proposal would cause a clawback or not seems to turn on the reduction as applied to the phrase "the amount of tax computed under subsection (b)." We started with a "prejudice" that the bill wanted total claw back and, therefore, we assumed that the term "tax" was the gift tax credit calculated under Section 2001(b). In other words, we assumed that the reduction in "tax" was not addressed to the net estate tax computed under Section 2001(b) but rather the gift tax offset (credit) computed under that section which is subtracted from the estate tax otherwise calculated under the section.

- iii. One colleague wrote concerning the possible claw back: "I keep reading and reading the language and propose new subsection (h) to Section 2001 which adds an "adjustment to reflect changes in exclusion amount." I've gone over it and over it. At first, I computed the estate tax on an included gift using rates at the date of gift but then realized subsection (g) would require the use of rates at the date of death. At least, I think that's what subsection (g) requires. The addition of subsection (d) to section 2502 and particularly (4) which defines 'applicable exclusion amount' confused me since that same phrase is used in the estate tax adjustment paragraph. .When I tried to insert the gift application exclusion amount from 2502, I end up with a credit – money back to the estate – which obviously was not intended. I've come around to the view that the new 2001(h) is really designed to avoid clawback, but ..." While the language may be unclear, certainly from a planning perspective the earlier planning is completed perhaps the better.
- iv. Many likely assume that they can wait until after the 2020 election and then, based on the election results, determine whether or not to incur the cost and hassles of planning. But if this type of provision is replicated in future legislation it might negate the ability to plan effectively after new estate tax legislation is proposed if there is a Democratic sweep. This is a risk that clients should weigh carefully. For example, it is common to transfer assets to a DAPT before marriage to backstop a prenuptial agreement or in lieu of a prenuptial agreement. That type of planning would have to rely on incomplete gift trusts or may no longer be feasible with such a low gift exemption. Also, if the gift exemption is reduced to $1 million, the ability of clients to leverage wealth out of their estates, to implement asset protection planning, to safeguard assets for matrimonial purposes, etc. could all be severely hindered. Practitioners must also consider the range of other restrictions proposed in the Sanders' Act. If GRATs, discounts, and other techniques are also proscribed as proposed in the ACT, the ability to plan around a $1 million exemption will be more limited than it had been in the past years when the $1 million exemption was law. Then, discounted FLP interests inside GRATs, rolling GRATs, etc. all facilitated wealth transfers “around” the low $1million exemption. If a sweeping change as Sanders has proposed is enacted the prior means of dealing with a low exemption will largely not be available.

- n. Upstream Planning: Many practitioners have touted the use of “upstream” planning to salvage otherwise unusable exemptions that elderly relatives of clients have. For example, if a parent has an estate of only $4 million, child could create a trust with $7 million, and give parent a general power of appointment (“GPOA”) over that trust. That GPOA could require the consent of a non-adverse party, could be crafted as a limited power of appointment and someone could hold the right to convert it to a GPOA, etc. The intent of the plan was that parent’s estate would include the assets in the trust and those assets would garner an estate tax free adjustment (hopefully step-up) in income tax basis on parent’s death. If the exemption is reduced to the $3.5 million as in the Sanders’ Act, most or all upstream planning would be obviated. If that occurs practitioners might want to review that planning to be certain that the estate inclusion in the upstream plan does not inadvertently trigger an unintended estate tax on the senior generation’s death. While many such upstream plans were likely crafted to only include in the senior generation’s estate an amount that does not trigger an estate tax, the more prudent course of action would be to confirm that. Clients who only recently had planning updated to address the inclusion of GPOAs to a higher generation will likely be frustrated by the yo-yo tax law changes and ongoing planning updates.
- o. Grantor Trusts: The heart of many estate plans for years has been the creation of grantor trusts. The Act would include in client’s taxable estates all assets held by trusts that are grantor trusts, reduced only by taxable gifts made to the trust. These are trusts whose income is taxed to the settlor creating the trust. Currently, this income tax characterization for a trust permits a GRAT to pay its annuity to the settlor with appreciated assets, without causing gain recognition. In addition, the creator of the trust will report any income attributable to the trust on their own tax return, therefore paying the income tax on trust income, permitting greater growth of wealth inside the trust. It also permits the client to sell assets to the trust without recognition of gain due to that sale and shift growth outside your estate. These sales, often done for a note issued by the trust, have been a mainstay of planning in the estate planner’s arsenal. Consider: What if you added to any new trusts you draft for your clients (or old trusts that you decant into new trusts) a provision that says if the assets of the trust will be included in the clients estate then effective one-day before the clients death, the trust shall convert to non-grantor and all power holders of the trust that are holding powers that could taint or characterize the trust as a grantor trust agree that those powers or rights will be extinguished. Might that work as a safety net just in case you don't have the time or ability to affirmatively turn off grantor trust status just before a client's death? The answer based upon the language in the Act seems to be no: if the grantor trust status ends during the grantor lifetime, he or she will be deemed at that time to have made a gift of everything in the trust other than the amount of taxable gifts made to the trust.

- p. GST Tax: Another foundation of planning has been to shift value to an irrevocable trust and allocate generation skipping transfer ("GST") tax exemption to the trust. Properly done under the current system, the value of assets in that GST exempt trust, no matter how much they appreciate, should never be subject to the transfer taxation system. The compounding of wealth outside the estate tax system can provide incredible wealth shifting opportunities. When this is coupled with a long-term trust (dynastic trust) wealth can compound outside a client's estate forever. The Act appears to limit the application of the GST exemption to a maximum of 50 years. That change would hinder this type of planning and might result in a costly tax after 50 years of a trust's existence. If a change along the same lines as this proposal is enacted, but if it "grandfather's" existing trusts (i.e., the new restrictions only apply to trusts formed after the new law), many people, even those of moderate wealth, might benefit from creating long-term dynastic trusts now.
- q. GRATs: Grantor Retained Annuity Trusts ("GRATs") are a planning tool long favored by practitioners. A key benefit of GRATs is that clients can create these trusts to shift wealth out of their estates without using any (or any material) part of their gift tax exemption, to the extent the assets in the trust grow at a rate above the so-called Section 7520 rate (a relatively low rate the IRS announces each month). Many, perhaps most, GRATs were structured by practitioners as so-called zeroed out GRATs. This meant that the annuity payment the trust made to a client as the grantor creating the trust equaled (or almost equaled) the value of assets gifted to the trust. Upside appreciation (above the rate of return the IRS required be used in the technique) would inure to the beneficiaries of the GRAT with no gift tax cost. The Act's proposal would perhaps eliminate the viability of this technique in many cases by requiring a minimum 10 year term for any GRATs created after the enactment of the Act. If a client does not outlive the term of the GRAT, some or all the assets (generally) are included in the client's estate. That would dramatically increase the risk of a GRAT succeeding. There is also a minimum required gift amount, effectively removing the ability to have a zeroed out GRAT. These two changes could potentially make GRATs impractical for very wealthy taxpayers that have traditionally used GRATs when they no longer had gift tax exemption remaining. It would also seem to eliminate the commonly used technique of “rolling-GRATs”, where practitioners would create a 2 year GRAT and the client would “re-GRAT” each annuity received to a new GRAT and continue to shift appreciation beyond the Sec. 7520 rate out of the estate taxation system.

- r. Discounts: Valuation discounts would be severely restricted under the Act, e.g. not permissible in a family planning context and would come into effect upon passage of the Act.
- s. Example: Client wants to gift $18 million of interests in real estate LLCs that own neighborhood shopping centers. Because these are non-controlling interests under current law, the interests might be valued after a valuation discount at perhaps $11 million. At the current gift tax exemption, she might be able to simply gift all these interests to a trust for descendants. The discount in value is due to the interest she owns does not control the LLCs and cannot dictate when a distribution is made or when the LLC might be liquidated. If the client waited until after the Act, or a similar proposal is enacted the elimination of discounts might reduce the percentage that can be gifted. If the exemption is lowered as well, even less can be transferred. This is all potentially even worse still. Based on some recent case law developments. The IRS might argue that if she retains any interests in the LLCs after the transfers are made, that the client “in conjunction with” others (i.e. those that the interests are gifted to) controls the LLC and therefore even the interests which client thought she transferred end up included in her taxable estate. The lower exemption and restriction or elimination of discounts will make it more difficult for clients to shift remaining equity positions out of their estate under a Sanders’ estate tax regime to avoid the reach of Powell.
- t. Crummey Powers: Another common planning tool has been for clients to make gifts to trusts from which a class of beneficiaries can withdraw a pro-rata portion of the gift made by the grantor, up to the annual gift exclusion amount for that beneficiary. This has facilitated the ability for clients to make large gifts to a trust, e.g. used to buy and hold life insurance, and not incurring any gift tax cost due to the gift. The Act has proposed eliminating this technique. If this applied to all trusts after enactment, the results could eliminate the common Irrevocable Life Insurance Trust (“ILIT”) which has been ubiquitous in estate plans. Practitioners might discuss with their clients implementing an ILIT so it is in place before any changes are made to existing law, in case existing trusts are grandfathered (i.e., exempted from the new change). Clients might also consider making large gifts now (using that exemption that might also disappear) so that they won’t have to rely on annual gifts to fund their life insurance premium payments.

- u. Example: Client has a typical ILIT with Crummey powers. Premiums are $75,000/year and are easily covered by the annual demand powers available to children and grandchildren who are beneficiaries of the trust. But if a Sanders' type law is enacted and Crummey powers prospectively eliminated (even for trusts predating the law change) the client will not be able to fund premiums without incurring a costly current gift tax cost. The client might be able to transfer a sufficient amount of marketable securities to the trust now, using her exemption, so that the future premiums can be paid from a combination of the income and principal of the gift made. It might also be worthwhile if this is pursued to inquiring as to the results of prepaying future premiums currently to minimize future income tax costs to the client.
- v. Example: Since GRATs are also on the chopping block, a wealthier client who does not have adequate exemption remaining to complete a large gift as in the prior example, might create and fund a GRAT that pours into the ILIT (a common approach when exemptions were lower for a non-GST exempt ILIT). The GRAT could be planned to endeavor to shift value to the ILIT to avoid the gift tax issues because if Crummey powers are in fact eliminated. This type of GRAT/ILIT plan might also be structured different than such plans had been historically. The traditional GRAT/ILIT plan would have entailed creating a two year GRAT with the ILIT as the beneficiary. Each time an annuity payment was made the client would re-GRAT the annuity into a new GRAT also benefiting the ILIT. But if GRATs are slated for restriction as in the Sanders' Act then perhaps a tier of GRATs with different terms might be created now, before the new GRAT restrictions are enacted, so that the existing GRATs may be grandfathered and continue to fund insurance premiums for years to come despite the restriction on Crummey powers.
- g. Don't Dismiss the Sanders Proposal.
  - w. If you think that Sanders's proposals in the Act is just an inconsequential flash, think again. Many aspects of Sanders's proposal discussed above are not new and should not be a surprise to practitioners. Democratic candidates have long called for restrictions that would make the estate tax harsher. For example, President Obama's Greenbook proposals consistently proposed the reduction of the estate tax exemption to $3.5 million, but that was only a small part of the get-tough-estate tax plan he had proposed. Many of the commonly used estate planning strategies discussed above, such as grantor retained annuity trusts ("GRATs") that can shift value out of a client's estate to the extent that the growth in those assets exceed a mandated federal interest rates, note sale transactions to grantor trusts (the client sells a non-controlling interest in an asset whose value is discounted because of the lack of control and marketability of that assets to lock in not only the discounts but future post-sale growth), and much more were curtailed in similar ways to those proposed in the Act. Whoever helped craft the proposals understood many of the tax planning strategies the wealthy use to shift assets outside their estates. These and other changes from the Obama White House appear to be part of the playbook for Sanders and other Democratic nominees.

h. Additional Planning Steps to Consider Now

- x. Following are a list of planning steps practitioners might propose to their wealthy and mega-wealthy clients, along with some of the reasons why planning should be pursued sooner rather than later. But keep in mind if the Act was made law tomorrow (unlikely) clients could already be out of luck. So, while there is certainly no means of predicting what might, or might not happen, you should consider advising clients to at least review with their entire planning team whether they should accelerate their planning and get it in place now.
- y. QTIPs: Marital trusts such as Qualified Terminable Interest Property (“QTIP”) trusts are taxed in the estate of the surviving spouse. This technique is commonly used by practitioners and many have made this the default plan for many clients. However, if a much lower exemption is enacted through the Act, those clients with QTIPs could be exposed to the potential of a high tax cost. Consider implementing a disclaimer of part of the income interest in the QTIP now for clients currently with a QTIP trust created by a deceased spouse. That disclaimer could trigger a deemed gift of all of the QTIP assets (principal). That would use up part of the exemption the surviving spouse has before the law might reduce his or her exemption. It is not clear whether a change in the law might affect the unused exemption of the first spouse to die (called the Deceased Spouse Unused Exemption, or “DSUE”). Another approach might be to distribute out of the QTIP assets to the surviving spouse if the QTIP trust terms permit such a distribution, and have the surviving spouse gift those assets to, for example, a self-settled domestic asset protection trust (“DAPT”) of which he or she can be a beneficiary. If a QTIP is not a GST exempt trust, consider creating a Sec. 678 grantor trust and shifting value out of the QTIP via a note sale to that new trust. Under the current law there are numerous options for practitioners to employ for their clients, but those clients may have to get them while they still can.
- z. Crummey Trusts: Many irrevocable trusts, including the typical life insurance trust or ILIT, are based on the premise of making annual gifts that qualify for the (now $15,000) gift tax annual exclusion. But that the administration required to take advantage of this technique certainly can be a hassle: consistent gifts, writing checks, issuing annual demand notices (Crummey powers). Clients have consistently commented on their distaste of the steps required. Consider suggesting to clients that they make a big gift to the trust now (and file a gift tax return for that gift) that will cover what would have otherwise been annual gifts for a long time and dispense with future annual administrative hassles. If future laws lower the exemption or reduce annual gift exclusions, such as the proposals in the Act, this kind of simplification likely would not be possible. If the Act removes the ability to use Crummey powers, clients will not be able to fund this type of trust the way they have in the past. Suggest to clients that they implement simplifying steps while they still can. In addition, practitioners might want to consider suggesting to clients decanting (merging) the existing old Crummey trust into a new trust that provides more flexibility.

- aa. Split-Dollar/Note Sales: Many wealthy taxpayers, who can barely be considered wealthy now relative to the high temporary exemptions, engaged in split-dollar life insurance plans, note sale transactions, and other techniques to shift wealth out of their estates. The result is an existing trust that owes money to those clients for the purchase of assets (e.g., an interest in a family business), or on a note secured by life insurance. A simple gift to the trust within the parameters of the current high exemption might be used to unwind that old plan and simplify ongoing plan administration. But keep in mind that Sanders' Act, if enacted as proposed, might clawback these 2019 transfers. While no one can determine what future legislation might do, it may well prove advantageous to have clients make these transfers and unwind the planning by using exemption while they still have it.
- bb. DAPTs/SLATs: Domestic asset protection trusts ("DAPTs") are trusts the client creates that they are a beneficiary of. Spousal lifetime access trusts ("SLATs") are trusts the client creates that their spouse is a beneficiary of. The key of these trusts for planning now is that clients may still benefit from assets they shift out of their estate. There are lots of options (and risks) with either of these techniques, but the key is that for most clients access is critical to have the ability to gift away sufficient assets to use most/all of their exemption. Both of these types of trusts, if they succeed, might provide the client with access to the assets transferred. If the techniques are successful, assets might be moved outside the clients estate and be out of the reach of their creditors, but they may benefit from the trust if they need to.
- i. Ancillary Planning Considerations Favoring Earlier Planning
  - cc. In formulating planning for clients, practitioners may consider some of the following concepts:
  - dd. Step-Transaction Doctrine: If there are a sequence of steps in a plan that are not independent, the IRS might disregard them and collapse the plan into a single event, potentially causing an adverse result inconsistent with why the planning was initially completed. Although one court approved a short time period between transfers it is certainly preferable to begin planning earlier and have more time, and independent economic events, between transfers.

- ee. Example: Wife gives $5 million of assets to her husband, who the next day gifts those assets to a trust that benefits the donor/wife (e.g., a spousal lifetime access trust or SLAT). The IRS might disregard the intervening steps of the gift to the husband, and the husband's gift to the trust, therefore just treating the transaction as if the wife gave the assets directly to the trust. If she has already used her gift tax exemption, that could trigger a gift tax. If instead of the clients waiting to the last minute to complete planning, consider if the wife gave the gift to husband now in early 2019. Those funds are then commingled with the husband's assets and invested perhaps even using a different asset allocation. Then, more than a year from now in 2020, husband makes a gift to the trust. The intervening time, the fact that the transfers occurred in different tax years, and the investment with other funds, might all serve to reduce the risk that a step-transaction challenge can be successfully argued by the IRS. Waiting might harm the client's planning.
- ff. Reciprocal Trust Doctrine: One of the factors that can serve to differentiate trusts each spouse creates for the other is creating them at different times. The earlier the planning process is begun; the more time remains to differentiate the two trusts by time. For clients waiting until the last minute (however that may be determined) this differentiating feature will be sacrificed.
- gg. Asset Protection: Every doctor, attorney, accountant, and really every professional, board of director member, real estate developer, etc. should be concerned about liability exposure. Society seems to be getting meaner and more litigious as time progresses. The current large gift and estate tax exemptions make it easy for clients to transfer assets into protective irrevocable trust structures (whichever trust "flavor" that is chosen). If clients do not take advantage of the current exemptions while they are still in effect, the opportunity might be lost and at that point only more complex, costly and riskier options may remain to shift wealth into protective structures.
- hh. Suboptimal Trusts: Many old trusts are not optimally drafted, some have mistakes, many were created when planning styles were different (e.g. distribute assets at age 30 outright instead of keeping in long term trusts), they may not have allocated GST exemption, and so on. Suggest to clients that they allow you to do housekeeping now, while there's large gift and GST exemptions in case you need them in the cleanup. For example, if clients decant (merge) an old suboptimal trust into a better drafted more modern trust consider making a late allocation of GST exemption to that trust. That means allocating some of the clients $11.4 million GST exemption to that trust now (rather than when a gift was first made years ago to the old trust). This late allocation might enhance the overall benefits of the trust in that it may then be outside the transfer tax system for as long as the trust lasts.

- ii. While the Act proposed by Sanders is unlikely to be enacted for a sometime, or ever, it is a clear indication of the direction in which Sanders and perhaps others in the Democratic party might wish to see the estate taxation system move. You can advise your clients that they can either wait and see and hope, or they can act now and take proactive steps in case any of the concepts proposed in the Act become reality. The latter certainly may prove more prudent.

18. Estate (Wealth) Tax Proposal – Elizabeth Warren.

- a. Elizabeth Warren proposed a new wealth tax on wealthy Americans which most dismiss as impossible to enact or administer.
- b. Warren had proposed an annual wealth tax on Americans with more than $50 million in assets at a rate of 2%, and 3% for over $1 billion.
- c. This tax was estimated to affect only 75,000 families.

19. Estate Tax Proposal - California.

- a. On March 26, 2019 Senate Bill 378 was introduced to create a California estate tax with an exemption of $3.5 million. The proposed California estate tax phases out at the current federal estate tax exemption amount of $11.4 million to avoid subjecting a California resident to both federal and state estate tax. The tax rate would be a very high 40%.<sup>35</sup>
- b. The taxes collected will be used to mitigate wealth concentration, i.e. to alleviate the so-called “wealth gap” and would fund a new “Children's Wealth and Opportunity Building Fund.” To fund services that directly address and alleviate socio-economic inequality and build assets among people who have historically lacked them, including helping low income children build wealth through savings accounts.
- c. The average white family has over 40 times more wealth than the average black family, and over 20 times more wealth than an average Latino family. The goal of this tax is to address this disparity.

20. Ethics.

- a. A recent American Bar Association publication reminded its readers that the ABA Standing Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility’s Formal Opinion, Rule 1.4, requires that ethical lawyers “self-report” to a current client if they have erred in the client’s representation and if the error is material. The test is whether a disinterested lawyer would conclude that the error is reasonably likely to harm or prejudice the client; or is of such a nature that it would reasonably cause a client to consider terminating representation even in the absence of harm or prejudice.

- b. What is an “error?” Is having created a credit shelter trust that now loses basis step up possibilities and no longer provides any estate tax benefit an “error”? It would seem that it is not an error, but how would it be characterized?
- c. Self-reporting is a concerning concept. When might a practitioner undertake self-reporting? Perhaps an independent attorney should be retained to guide the attorney as to whether or not self-reporting is required. Communication with the attorney’s malpractice carrier before the reporting may be necessary.

21. Family Structure and Estate Planning.

- a. Commentators have addressed for years the evolving American family unit and that the historic assumptions on which much of estate planning was premised, applies to a smaller segment of the population. That trend continues and below is yet another societal change that practitioners should be mindful of when assisting clients.<sup>36</sup>
- b. The article suggests that many middle aged parents, referred to as “the middle generation” have been devastated by opioid abuse and other substances. The result is that the middle generation’s children are increasingly being raised by grandparents. “It’s a responsibility that many didn’t expect and weren’t prepared for. Retired folks find themselves trading their sedans for minivans, moving out of their adult-only communities and searching for work to cover the expenses that come with raising a child.”
- c. For those affected the impact is far reaching. Financial plans need to be completely revised using new budgets reflective of the new financial responsibilities for one or more grandchildren. Will the grandparents be able to designate guardians for their grandchildren if the parents are assumed not sufficiently responsible to do so? This might require a formal adoption of the grandchildren. What becomes of legal documents? The need to provide succession of trustees to provide for and assist the grandchildren may change significant components of the grandparents planning documents. Issues of who should be appointed in various positions may change dramatically. The common default of many to name an adult child will not be viable if that adult child is struggling with addiction or other issues. Will it still be appropriate to name other children (siblings of the addicted child) in fiduciary positions or will the conflicts make this unpalatable? Perhaps those affected might default to naming institutional trustees?

22. FBAR.

- a. The IRS has been pursuing with vigor those not reporting foreign bank accounts and other assets as required. In a recent case the IRS was permitted to assess higher penalties where it found the taxpayer willfully failed to report foreign accounts.<sup>37</sup>

- b. The maximum penalty assessed was 50% of the foreign account balance.
- c. Some background first. U.S. citizens and resident aliens, including those with dual citizenship, have an annual April 15 deadline to e-file their annual Report of Foreign Bank and Financial Accounts (FBAR) if they have a foreign bank or financial account. In general, the filing requirement applies to anyone who had an interest in, or signature or other authority, over foreign financial accounts whose aggregate value exceeded $10,000 at any time during 2018. Because of this threshold, the IRS encourages taxpayers with foreign assets, even relatively small ones, to check if this filing requirement applies to them. The FBAR filing, Form 114, must be filed electronically with the Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (FinCEN). In addition, Form 1040, Part III of Schedule B asks about the existence of foreign accounts, such as bank and securities accounts, and usually requires U.S. citizens to report these items for the country in which each account is located. Also, separate from the foreign accounts reporting requirements above, certain taxpayers may also have to complete and attach to their return Form 8938, Statement of Specified Foreign Financial Assets. Generally, U.S. citizens, resident aliens and certain nonresident aliens must report specified foreign financial assets on this form if the aggregate value of those assets exceeds certain thresholds<sup>38</sup>
- d. The facts in the case suggest why the IRS was not found to have abused its discretion in assessing harsher penalties:
  - a. The taxpayer knew she had funds in foreign bank accounts.
  - b. She did not report the interest on those foreign bank accounts. Her income tax return reflected no foreign interest.
  - c. She managed her foreign accounts with the help of her overseas bankers.
  - d. She did not maintain the account in her own name.
  - e. She hid the account from the IRS by not investing in U.S. securities
  - f. She failed to tell her accountant that she had a foreign bank account.Despite
- e. Practitioners might discuss with clients the importance of complying with foreign reporting requirements and the harsh potential impact.

23. FBAR.

- a. One of the confusing issues for many taxpayers is whether they have to file to report foreign accounts that they have no financial interest in if they have signature authority over those accounts. After all, it's not their interest to report. For example, if a taxpayer owns a foreign account and gives a family member a power of attorney that governs that account, the agent under the power of attorney has no economic interest over the account, but does have signature authority.

<sup>38</sup> IR-2019-63, Apr. 4, 2019.

- b. The filing deadline has been extended for such individuals.<sup>39</sup>

24. Financial Planning Costs.

- a. Many wealth advisers bundle planning services together with their asset management fee. Once a client pays the asset management fee the array of services from tax and estate planning to a comprehensive financial plan are all inclusive. But that is not the only approach, and that approach might be changing to charging additional fees for add-on services.
- b. How much does it cost to get a comprehensive financial plan?<sup>40</sup> “The average cost for a standalone comprehensive financial plan is $2,400 (up from $2,200 in a 2012 study from the Financial Planning Association). Notably, though, our research finds that more and more advisory firms who offer financial plans actually are charging for them separately – rather than merely bundling the plan into their AUM fees – and in fact there is a growing rise of financial advisors who are charging for financial plans solely in a “fee-for-service” manner (hourly fees, monthly subscription fees, or annual retainer fees), rather than blending fees with AUM at all.”
- c. “...the biggest driver of financial planning fees is not the cost... clients with more financial means to pay for a financial plan tend to pay more for a financial plan. Opening a debate of whether more affluent clients pay more for financial plans simply because they can afford to do so, because they tend to use more experienced advisors with deeper expertise (even if “the plan” itself is the same), or simply because their higher net worth and affluence means they perceive more value in the financial plan, to begin with.”
- d. “...more recent 2017 study on the fees that advisors charge, by Bob Veres, included 956 advisors at RIAs and broker-dealers and similarly found that while the AUM model remains dominant (even amongst those who deliver financial planning and not “just” investment management), the trend in overlapping fees has continued. Specifically, Veres found that more than half of financial advisors doing financial planning (nearly 55%) were charging an AUM fee as well as a separate financial planning fee, and that charging only AUM fees is actually only done by a minority of advisors.”
- e. What might this mean for allied professionals? Perhaps attorneys and CPAs should unbundle planning from other services. Perhaps attorneys should charge a planning fee that similarly considers the net worth of a client and be separate from the billing for drafting or compliance work.

- b. Practitioners in all disciplines should review the risks of identity theft, fraud, elder financial abuse, etc. with clients. This should be an integral part of wealth management and planning for aging. Consider:
  - a. Discuss with clients involving an independent CPA to monitor accounts and maintain books and records for them if they reach an age or have health challenges such that they cannot do so themselves.
  - b. Clients might involve an agent under a durable power of attorney or co-trustee on a revocable trust earlier. Traditional agents and successor trustees only become involved when a problem occurs or the client/principal/grantor is incapacitated. That is often too late as by that point considerable financial damage may have already been done. Perhaps advisers and clients alike should rethink document structure and use and involve fiduciaries at an earlier point in time to perhaps prevent the abuse that might be triggered waiting for incapacity.
  - c. Advisers should review the manner in which clients pay bills, the number of accounts and different institutions they have and seek to help clients streamline their financial affairs and infuse checks and balances, e.g. a trust protector on a revocable trust.
  - d. A simple precaution can be to have duplicate copies of an aging or infirm client’s monthly statements sent to a trusted party (ideally a CPA but if not, perhaps a family member who is not the agent under the power of attorney or successor trustee under the revocable trust).
  - e. See the discussions above under planning for aging clients.

26. Gift Tax – Protective Claim for Refund.

- a. A taxpayer can file a protective claim for a refund for gift taxes.<sup>42</sup> While the gift tax law does not permit filing a protective refund claim and the IRS, it does not prohibit such a filing. Therefore, the IRS in a recent CCA saw no basis to deny it.
- b. Background.
  - a. There are several authorities addressing filing a protective refund claim, but none addressed doing so in the context of a gift tax.
  - b. The IRS noted that a prior CCA 200938021 discussed protective refund claims.
  - c. The Internal Revenue Manual I.R.M. 21.5.3.4.7.3.1 explains protective refund claims.
  - d. The requirements for a protective refund claim was set forth in U.S. v. Kales, 41-2 USTC ¶9785, 314 U.S. 186.
- c. The Chief Counsel ruled that there was no basis for denying the protective refund claim for gift tax.

27. GST Allocation.

- a. A taxpayer can allocate increased GST exemption to modify the inclusion ratio of a trust created in a prior year.<sup>43</sup>
- b. Taxpayers should evaluate old trusts that are not GST exempt, or which have an inclusion ratio of more than zero, to determine if they should use current elevated GST exemptions in a late allocation to make that trust GST exempt. Often irrevocable life insurance trusts (“ILITs”) were structured not to be GST exempt. This was common for term policies since less than 2% of term life insurance policies are ever collected. So, when the GST exemption was limited to $1 million, many ILITs were intentionally not allocated GST exemption as it might have been wasted. But if the client’s wealth is such that the exemption is unlikely to be used perhaps making a late allocation to the trust to make it GST exempt may be worthwhile. This might be followed by a decanting of the trust to a newer trust that has longer term provisions. For example, if the old ILIT distributed all trust corpus to the beneficiary at age 35, extending the term of the trust for the beneficiaries lifetime, or as long as the rule of perpetuities permits, may be worthwhile as well. Considering that some tax proposals, e.g. Bernie Sanders, call for the elimination of Crummey powers, capping the duration of a GST exempt trust to 50 years, and reducing the exemption, this type of planning may be valuable for clients who feel that under the present system transfer tax planning is irrelevant to them. Perhaps it is not.

28. GST Automatic Allocation.

- a. Taxpayers often neglect to address the GST automatic allocation rules. This certainly is due in part to the complexity of the rules and perhaps that many professional advisers are not as adept as they should be on these matters but nonetheless assist clients in preparing Forms 709 gift tax returns. In this particular letter ruling the IRS granted an extension of time for the taxpayers to opt out of the GST automatic allocation rules.<sup>44</sup> Specifically, the decedent's spouse was granted a 120 day extension of time to election under Code Sec. 2632(c)(5) out of the GST automatic allocation rules for gifts made in years 2 -17 to an irrevocable trust.
- b. On a date prior to December 31, 2000, the Donor created an irrevocable trust, for the benefit of a child and the child's issue (“Trust”). Thus, the trust could have GST implications. Prior to December 31, 2000, Donor and Spouse made gifts to Trust but did not allocate their GST exemption to Trust. Subsequent to December 31, 2000, Donor made gifts to Trust in Years 2 through 17.
- c. Donor and Spouse retained the Tax Department of Company to advise and prepare their Year 2 through 17 Forms 709 reporting the Year 2 through 17 transfers to Trust. Although Donor and Spouse did not intend for GST exemption to be allocated to the Year 2 through 17 transfers, Company's tax professionals failed to advise Donor or Spouse of the rules under Code Sec. 2632(c) regarding the automatic allocation of GST exemption and the ability to elect out under Code Sec. 2632(c)(5) and they did not do so. Tax Department discovered these errors upon review of the Forms 709.

- d. Code Section 2632(a)(1) provides that any allocation by an individual of his or her GST exemption under Code Sec. 2631(a) may be made at any time on or before the date prescribed for filing the estate tax return for such individual's estate.
- e. Under the so-called automatic allocation rules, Code Sec. 2632(c)(1) provides that if any individual makes an indirect skip during such individual's lifetime, any unused portion of that individual's GST exemption is treated as allocated to the property transferred to the extent necessary to make the inclusion ratio for such property zero. This includes any transfer of property to a "GST trust," as defined in Code Sec. 2632(c)(3)(B). A GST trust is a trust that could have GST potential with respect to the transferor unless the trust satisfies any of the exceptions listed in Code Sec. 2632(c)(3)(B)(i)-(vi).
- f. The opt out provision under Code Sec. 2632(c)(5)(A)(i) provides that an individual may elect to have the automatic allocation rules of § 2632(c)(1) not apply to an indirect skip, or any or all transfers made by such individual to a particular trust. Section 2632(c)(5)(B)(ii) provides that the election may be made on a timely filed gift tax return for the calendar year for which the election is to become effective.
- g. Reg. Sec. 26.2632-1(b)(2)(iii)(A)(2) provide that a transferor may prevent the automatic allocation of GST exemption (elect out) with respect to any transfer constituting an indirect skip made to a trust.
- h. Section 26.2632-1(b)(2)(iii)(B) provides that to elect out, the transferor must attach an election out statement to a Form 709 filed within the time period provided in Code Sec. 26.2632-1(b)(2)(iii)(C).
- i. Section 2642(g)(1)(B) provides that in determining whether to grant relief the Secretary shall take into account all relevant circumstances, including evidence of intent contained in the trust instrument or instrument of transfer and such other factors as the Secretary deems relevant. For purposes of determining whether to grant relief, the time for making the allocation (or election) shall be treated as if not expressly prescribed by statute.
- j. Notice 2001-50, 2001-2 C.B. 189, provides that, under § 2642(g)(1)(B), the time for allocating the GST exemption to lifetime transfers and transfers at death, the time for electing out of the automatic allocation rules, and the time for electing to treat any trust as a GST trust are to be treated as if not expressly prescribed by statute. The Notice further provides that taxpayers may seek an extension of time to make an allocation described in § 2642(b)(1) or (b)(2) or an election described in § 2632(b)(3) or (c)(5) under the provisions of § 301.9100-3.
- k. Sections 301.9100-1 through 301.9100-3 provide the standards the Commissioner will use to determine whether to grant an extension of time to make an election.

Section 301.9100-2 provides an automatic extension of time for making certain elections. Section 301.9100-3 provides the standards used to determine whether to grant an extension of time to make an election whose date is prescribed by a regulation (and not expressly provided by statute). In accordance with Code Sec. 2642(g)(1)(B) and Notice 2001-50, taxpayers may seek an extension of time to make an allocation described in Code Sec. 2642(b)(1) or (b)(2) or an election described in Code Sec. 2632(b)(3) or (c)(5) under the provisions of Code Sec. 301.9100-3.

1. Code Sec. 301.9100-3(a) provides, in part, that requests for relief subject to Code Sec. 301.9100-3 will be granted when the taxpayer provides the evidence to establish to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that the taxpayer acted reasonably and in good faith, and the grant of relief will not prejudice the interests of the Government. Good faith exists if the taxpayer reasonably relied on a qualified tax professional, including a tax professional employed by the taxpayer, and the tax professional failed to make, or advise the taxpayer to make, the election.

29. Guardianship Abuse.

- a. An organization called CEAR is advocating for reforms to better protect vulnerable adults, and their estates, in probate and guardianship adjudication. An adult guardianship order removes a person's rights, decision making ability, and estate granting them to a third party. The action is legally akin to ordering a civil death sentence to the alleged incapacitated person as they, and their estate, become the property of the guardian. Fraudulent guardianships describe those who fraudulently petition the court to gain control of a person and their estate in denial of federal and state statutes, estate documents, and often the emotional objections of the quite articulate vulnerable adult and their family. Trustees of family trusts are often targeted by the process.
- b. Predatory guardians who embrace the practice leverage the court system to liquidate estate assets under the color of law. By involving the courts these predatory parties are able to deny fully executed and legitimate estate documents and all objections. All states require an initial inventory and annual accountings to insure conservation of the estate, but court oversight is often woefully incomplete. Courts leave accountability to the "honor system". Evidence and due process are often ignored by these courts and predatory litigators, focused solely on gaining control of an estate, hold great influence over the judges.
- c. The National Center for State Courts reports that 1.3 million American adults were under guardianship in 2015 and 176,000 were added to the rolls. This is only an estimate as most states do not keep records on those conscripted into guardianship. Estimates by the Federal Reserve and Metropolitan Life reported in 2015 that the average 75 year old has a net worth of $300,000. Using these estimates substantiates that nearly $300 billion in assets are controlled by guardians and approximately $50 billion in new assets are obtained each year.

The numbers are growing 10-15% per annum due to the aging baby boomer generation and the growth in dementia related diseases.

- d. CEAR refers to this as “estate trafficking” and calls it “the crime of the 21st century.”
- e. Perhaps these tragedies are another reason to rethink planning for aging. Clients should put in place a comprehensive plan, perhaps including a funded revocable trust with various built in safeguards (e.g. co-trustees, a monitor, organized financial team, etc.). Health care proxies can include recommendations of persons to be appointed as guardians. While not binding on a court they might prove persuasive. Steps should be taken to avoid these issues.
- f. Consider these comments in light of the discussions above under “Fraud” and “Aging.”

30. IRA – Secure Act.

- a. Proposals have been made to modify and enhance retirement savings. The so-called “Secure Act,” is a proposal that many might consider likely to be enacted in 2019.<sup>45</sup>
- b. Proposed changes include eliminating the age limit on IRA contributions, deferring the Required Minimum Distributions (“RMDs”) from age 70½ to age 72, etc. The revenue costs of these changes intended to deal with the realities of longevity would be paid for by restricting stretch IRAs, a revenue raiser that has been discussed for many years.
- c. The implications of this while important to many may not change most planning techniques but rather will affect more detailed decisions and likely will have a meaningful impact on financial forecasts for aging clients that avail themselves of the new rules, if enacted.
- d. Consider the impact of such a change on Qualified Charitable Distributions (“QCDs”)? Might deferring the age for RMDs also defer the age for QCDs?

31. IRA – Division.

- a. The IRS evaluated the tax consequences of a division of an IRA.<sup>46</sup>
- b. In the letter ruling the decedent’s estate was the sole beneficiary of an IRA.
- c. The IRA was divided, through a trustee-to-trustee transfer, into inherited IRAs for each of the beneficiaries, according to their equitable percentages.
- d. The IRS held that this did not result in taxable distributions or payments.
- e. The beneficiaries were also permitted to take required minimum distributions (“RMDs”) from each of their inherited IRAs and the amount required to be taken from each inherited IRA could be determined independently of the RMDs of the other beneficiaries.
- f. The division of the IRA through a trustee-to-trustee transfer into inherited IRAs was not a transfer under Code Sec. 691(a)(2).

32. IRA – 60 Day Rollover Requirement.

- a. A surviving spouse will be treated as having acquired an IRA directly from the deceased spouse, not from the decedent's estate or testamentary trust.<sup>47</sup>
- b. Although the trust was designated as the beneficiary of the IRA, the trust disclaimed its interest in the IRA and it passed to the decedent's estate. Further, to get the IRA to the surviving spouse, the decedent's child and several grandchildren also had to disclaim their interests in the IRA. The net result of all of these steps was that the surviving spouse was entitled to the IRA as the beneficiary of the estate.
- c. Because the taxpayer was entitled to the IRA as the beneficiary of the estate, then, the surviving spouse was the individual for whose benefit the IRA was maintained and was permitted to roll over the IRA to one or more IRAs established and maintained in her own name. Code Sec. 408(d)(3)(A)(i).
- d. See the discussion under "Asset Protection" of an IRA rollover above.

33. IRA – Trust.

- a. Distributions from an IRA to a trust could be stretched over the life expectancy of the beneficiary.<sup>48</sup>

34. Life Insurance – Reporting.

- a. The 2017 tax act included new rules on life insurance reporting and also the determination of the income tax basis for a life insurance policy. Regulations discussing these rules were issued.<sup>49</sup>
- b. The 2017 tax act changes included, among others, the following. New tax reporting rules for life settlement transactions were enacted. Reporting requirements apply in the case of the purchase of an existing life insurance contract in a reportable policy sale and the act imposed reporting requirements on the payor in the case of the payment of reportable death benefits. (A reportable policy sale means the acquisition of an interest in a life insurance contract, directly or indirectly [such as through a partnership], if the acquirer has no substantial family, business or financial relationship with the insured apart from the acquirer's interest in such policy). The reporting requirement applies to every person who acquires a life insurance contract, or any interest in a life insurance contract, in a reportable policy sale during the taxable year. This is the acquisition of an interest in a life insurance contract, directly or indirectly, if the acquirer has no substantial family, business, or financial relationship with the insured (apart from the acquirer's interest in the life insurance contract). An indirect acquisition includes the acquisition of an interest in a partnership, trust, or other entity that holds an interest in the life insurance contract. Under the reporting requirement, the buyer reports information about the purchase to the IRS, to the insurance company that issued the contract, and to the seller. The information reported by the buyer about the purchase is: (1) the buyer's name, address, and taxpayer identification number ("TIN"), (2) the name, address, and TIN of each recipient of payment in the reportable policy sale, (3) the date of the sale, (4) the name of the issuer, and (5) the amount of each payment. The statement the buyer provides to any issuer of a life insurance contract is not required to include the amount of the payment or payments for the purchase of the contract. On receipt of a report described above, or on any notice of the transfer of a life insurance contract to a foreign person, the issuer is required to report to the IRS and to the seller: (1) the name, address, and TIN of the seller or the transferor to a foreign person, (2) the basis of the contract (i.e., the investment in the contract within the meaning of IRC Sec. 72(e)(6)), and (3) the policy number of the contract. When a reportable death benefit is paid under a life insurance contract, the payor insurance company is required to report information about the payment to the IRS and to the payee. Under this reporting requirement, the payor reports: (1) the name, address and TIN of the person making the payment, (2) the name, address, and TIN of each recipient of a payment, (3) the date of each such payment, (4) the gross amount of the payment (5) the payor's estimate of the buyer's basis in the contract. A reportable death benefit means an amount paid by reason of the death of the insured under a life insurance contract that has been transferred in a reportable policy sale.

- c. A second change made by the 2017 tax act pertains to the determination of the basis of a life insurance policy. In Revenue Ruling 2009-13, 2009-21 IRB 1029, the IRS had ruled that income recognized under IRC Sec. 72(e) on surrender to the life insurance company of a life insurance contract with cash value is ordinary income. In the case of sale of a cash value life insurance contract, the IRS ruled that the insured's (seller's) basis is reduced by the cost of insurance (not defined), and the gain on sale of the contract is ordinary income to the extent of the amount that would be recognized as ordinary income if the contract were surrendered (the "inside buildup"), and any excess is long-term capital gain. Gain on the sale of a term life insurance contract (without cash surrender value) is long-term capital gain under the ruling. The Act overrules the above and provides that, in determining the basis of a life insurance or annuity contract, no adjustment is made for mortality, expense, or other reasonable charges incurred under the contract (known as "cost of insurance"). This change specifically reverses the position of the IRS in Revenue Ruling 2009-13 that on sale of a cash value life insurance contract, the insured's (seller's) basis is reduced by the cost of insurance.
- d. IRS has issued proposed regs on the new information reporting obligations for reportable policy sales of life insurance contracts and payments of reportable death benefits. The proposed regs also provide guidance on the amount of death benefits excluded from gross income under Code Sec. 101 following a reportable policy sale.

- e. In Notice 2018-41, 2018-20 IRB 584, IRS delayed the new information reporting obligations for certain life insurance contract transactions under Code Sec. 6050Y until final regs are published.
- f. The proposed regulations specify the manner and time at which the information reporting obligations must be made.

35. Loans – Can you Step or Defer Interest?

- a. Assume a client is going to engage in a note sale to a grantor dynasty trust (a so-called Intentionally Defective Irrevocable Grantor Trust or “IDIGT”). But the entity whose interests are being sold has current cash flow needs for business research and development. As a result, distributions will be difficult/limited for several years.
- b. Might the purchasing trust backload the scheduled payment dates of the interest that accrues under the term of the note? So, during the first X years of the note, the purchaser will pay interest every year at a rate of say 1%. The remaining and unpaid 2% interest (assuming a 3% AFR) will compound at the same 3% AFR rate until it is paid. Thus, the note will have negative amortization during the first X years of its term. After the first X years, the purchasing trust will pay the full interest that accrues every year on a current basis (or if advisable from a cash flow perspective another “step” in rate can be used). During the remaining term of the note, the purchaser also will pay the compounded shortfalls in interest payments that arose during the first X years of the note.
- c. Because the debtor trust under the note, the purchaser will not have sufficient cash flow to currently pay all the interest that accrues during the first X years of the note, it might be argued that the purchasing trust could be characterized as “thinly capitalized.” So, practitioners considering such a note structure should confirm and corroborate that thin capitalization is not an issue as that might undermine the validity of the debt itself and hence the transaction. Thus, there should be no issue as to whether the note will be respected as debt or whether it could instead be characterized as equity. The issue of the trust not being “thinly capitalized” will depend on a current balance sheet of the trust reflecting the current appraised value of assets it owns.
- d. The delayed payment during the first X years of the note of the interest that accrues should not by itself cause the note that the purchaser gives to the seller to be recharacterized (e.g. as an invalid indebtedness, a gift, as equity instead of debt, etc.).
- e. Using variable interest should not itself undermine the validity of a note. If a loan requires payments of interest calculated at a rate of interest based in whole or in part on an objective index or combination of indices of market interest rates (e.g., a prime rate, the applicable federal rate, the average yield on government securities as reflected in the weekly Treasury bill rate, the Treasury constant maturity series, or LIBOR (London interbank offered rate)), the loan will be treated as having sufficient stated interest if the rate fixed by the index is no lower than the applicable federal rate (1) on the date the loan is made, in the case of a term loan, and (2) for each semiannual period that the loan is outstanding, in the case of a demand loan.

- f. For term loans, determining the appropriate AFR is simply the use of an interest rate that is equal to the AFR with the same compounding period for the month in which the loan is made. For sale transactions the appropriate AFR is based not on the term of the note, but on its weighted average maturity.
- g. Code Sec. 7872, which created new rules for the tax treatment of loans with below-market interest rates, went into effect on June 6, 1984. The scope of this code section and its application for gift tax purposes were addressed in Frazer. The Tax Court determined that the Code Sec. 7872 applicable federal rate (“AFR”), and not the Code Sec. 483(e) six-percent interest rate, was controlling for gift tax valuation purposes. Accordingly, because the intra-family sale of real property in Frazer was not a bona fide arm's-length transaction free of donative intent, the court held that the excess of the face amount of a note bearing seven-percent interest over its recomputed present value, using the applicable federal rate for long-term loans, constituted a gift of interest.
- h. Code Sec. 7872 applies to any transaction that (1) is a bona fide loan, (2) is below market, (3) falls within one of four categories of below-market loans, and (4) does not qualify for one of several exceptions. The four categories are loans (1) from a donor to a donee, (2) from an employer to an employee, (3) from a corporation to a shareholder, and (4) with interest arrangements made for tax avoidance purposes [Code Sec. 7872(c)].
- i. Code Sec. 7872(a)(1) recharacterizes the below-market-rate demand loan as a two-step transaction:
- j. The lender treated as having transferred on the last day of the calendar year an amount equal to the forgone interest (the prevailing federal rate of interest less the loan's actual interest rate) to the borrower; and
- k. The borrower/trust is then treated as retransferring that amount back to the lender as imputed interest.
- l. What if the loan provides adequate interest so that it is not a below-market loan? There is no forgone interest to report under Code Sec. 7872. But if interest accrues and is not paid the original issue discount (OID) rules will apply. The OID rules would have the taxpayer report a pro rata amount of the overall amount of the OID over the life of the loan using a constant yield method under the Regulations under Code Sec. 1272. But on a sale to a grantor trust the OID complications appear to be obviated. So, while these rules should apply, they should have no income tax significance.
- m. Different variations can be devised based upon needs of the parties.
- n. Have interest accrue at different rates during the term of note instead of being paid at different rates. To clarify, the above discussion concerns accruing interest ratably over the note, just providing for payment at a different schedule.
- o. Pay interest that cannot be paid in cash by issuing a note from the borrower/trust for any unpaid interest. There does not seem to be any consistency in views as to whether this will make the note more problematic to support on audit. One view is that there is nothing prohibiting paying a note interest payment in-kind, e.g. with another note. The opposing view is that this might make the transaction appear uneconomic in contrast to “baking in” the cash flow considerations from inception, e.g. with a stepped note.

36. Loans - Bad Debts and Valid Indebtedness.

- a. The issue in question in this case was whether or not an LLC would be entitled claim a deduction for a worthless debt. The court found that the indebtedness was bona fide<sup>50</sup> The existence of a bona fide debt is a critical issue in many estate planning transactions. A common technique during periods of low interest rates is for a senior generation to loan funds to a younger generation for that generation to invest and earn the difference on the spread of the investment return over the hopefully much lower minimum interest rate that has to be charged. Another common transaction is for a taxpayer to sell an asset likely to appreciate to a grantor trust. Typically, the buying trust has inadequate resources to pay for the asset so it issues a note. The validity of that note is critical to the transaction being respected. There are a many other common estate planning transactions dependent on a debt being respected. This recent case evaluates a number of the factors that should be considered in structuring loan transactions, especially related party and family transactions.
- b. Factors the court considered with respect to the debt in question included:
  - i. The debt was evidenced by a promissory note.
  - ii. The note had a fixed maturity date.
  - iii. The rate of interest on the note was set at an above market rate.
  - iv. The lender intended to collect the debt, believed that the borrower would repay the debt, and had the legal right to enforce collection of the debt.
  - v. If there was a default a higher default interest rate would apply and the debtor would be entitled to attorney fees to collect.
  - vi. The debt, however, was unsecured.
  - vii. The repayment of the debt was not limited to solely the income from the borrower.
  - viii. The borrower was not thinly capitalized. There was an appraisal by an unrelated lender indicating that the borrower had substantial equity.
- m. Practitioners should consider communicating to clients the requirements for a valid debt. In many instances clients making intra-family loans, or loans between related entities, ignore some important formalities. A reminder to adhere to the requirements is always useful.

37. Longevity.

- a. “The number of U.S. billionaires has grown swiftly of late. There were an estimated 747 of them in North America in 2017, up from 490 in 2010, according to a study. At the same time, long-term economic data suggest the 10-figure crowd and those just behind them control ever-larger pieces of the economic pie. The wealthiest 1 percent control 37.2 percent of the country's personal wealth, while the bottom 50 percent control nothing."<sup>51</sup>

- b. “Longevity can be critical to the growth and long-term success of such family business interests, said Jonathan Flack, who leads PricewaterhouseCoopers’s U.S. Family Business unit. In earlier eras, longer lifespans were driven by declining child mortality. In the past 50 years, the driver has been older people living longer. Men in the top one-fifth of America by income born in 1960 can on average expect to reach almost 89, seven years more than their equally wealthy brethren born in 1930. (Life expectancy for men in the bottom wealth quintile remained roughly stable at 76.)”
- c. Consider what the above longevity statistics mean to planning. Using table life expectancies will understate actual life expectancy for the wealthy clients almost all advisers serve. Also, in the discussion of societal goals and the estate tax, the shocking statistics of expanding life expectancy for the wealthy and stagnant life expectancy for the lower tiers of wealth may well serve as an incentive for the proposals of universal health care to be paid for by a harsh estate tax.
- d. “The state of diminished capacity isn’t going to be a bright line,” she explained, given the vagaries of such diseases as dementia or Alzheimer’s. In the past, an aging tycoon may have relied on a trustee or family friend to make the call. Nowadays, the rich are planning for the possibility of a slow decline, making use of vehicles to transfer wealth or fund philanthropy while keeping control longer. And for protection, Glasgow said, the rich are introducing clauses in wills that require heirs to produce two, or even three, doctors who agree they are unfit to administer their own estate. One client stipulated that only a court could determine whether he was mentally incapacitated, she said.”
- e. Longevity planning for clients is clearly a significant part of what practices should encompass.
- f. There is already a growing wave of concern in the country about “perks” of the uber-wealthy. Longer life expectancy is likely to exacerbate that issue.

38. Malpractice – Risk Disclosure.

- a. A recent malpractice complaint filed in New Jersey has significant implications to estate planners in all disciplines.<sup>52</sup>
- b. Issues Practitioners Might Ponder in Light of Recant Malpractice Case

<sup>52</sup> <https://www.law.cornelljournal.com/12019/02/04/owenstein-faces-malpractice-lawsuit-over-creation-of-dynasty-trust/>.

- a. Two recent New Jersey malpractice cases have served as the catalyst of discussions between many advisers. Regardless of how the case is resolved, and at this preliminary juncture only a complaint has been filed so it is all quite preliminary, some of the issues raised directly in the case, and indirectly by a broader examination of the current planning landscape, included issues that have arisen in discussions concerning the case, may be worthy of discussion. Discussions of the case have raised several related issues that perhaps practitioners might wish to ponder:
- c. How practitioners might modify how they practice to perhaps reduce liability exposure?
  - a. Should different or additional language be added to retainer agreements?
  - b. Might different approaches be worthy of consideration to apprise clients of the risks inherent in so many estate planning transactions? What approaches might be useful? What approaches might be counter-productive?
  - c. Is it time for rules of professional conduct governing attorneys to be reconsidered as to restrictions on liability limitations given the current planning environment?
  - d. How do other allied professionals address liability limitations and what might that mean to estate planning attorneys?
  - e. Might mandatory arbitration provisions be beneficial? If beneficial are they permissible if attorney ethics rules proscribe their use?
- d. So, while the catalyst for this article was two recent malpractice complaints, the discussion and implications, are much broader.
- e. Background on the Case
  - a. The case involves a malpractice claim against a well-respected law firm (and national CPA firm) for planning what appears to be from the descriptions in the complaint, common estate planning steps of using GRATs, gifts, and note sales to dynasty trusts, etc. to reduce the potential estate tax obligations.
- f. At its core, the complaint focuses on:
  - a. Merely because the planning techniques are commonly used does not necessarily make those techniques appropriate for the particular client or circumstances in the instant case. While the resolution of this issue is uncertain, it is an important caution to practitioners to exercise caution in applying even common planning techniques without first understanding each client's unique situation and circumstances.
  - b. The potential for increased income tax consequences to the beneficiaries of the plan due to the loss of a potential step-up in basis on assets transferred out of the estate, and the income tax cost on negative basis real estate assets if the grantor trust to which they were transferred becomes non-grantor.

- c. Another significant component of the complaint appears to be the client's position that it was not informed of these risks. While the actual facts of this aspect of the case cannot be known, the mere issue itself has significance to practitioners and perhaps should change the standards of practice.
- d. The complaint appears to focus on the income tax consequences that will be experienced when grantor trust status is lost or toggled off. Several considerations that the complaint appears to ignore are that in the period of 2010 through 2012 (when the plan at the center of this contest was contemplated and implemented), the federal estate tax exemption was: (a) contemplated to be reduced and (b) the estate tax was generally higher than income taxes, especially if the compounding implications of a generation skipping transfer tax were added to the equation. It might also be suggested that the complaint ignores the inherent uncertainty of the tax system and the frequent and often significant changes. As but one example, presently Democratic Presidential candidates have suggested sweeping and harsh reform of the estate tax system. As but one example, Bernie Sanders has proposed a reduction in the gift tax exemption to $1 million, a reduction of the estate tax exemption to $3.5 million, and of greatest concern to the plaintiff, an increase in the marginal estate tax rate to 77%.
- g. The planning mechanisms utilized by the grantor plaintiff in this case were generally utilized in the estate planning profession and recognized as devices to effectuate a reduction in the federal estate tax. It is also generally well known that the use of a sale of an asset to an intentionally defective grantor trust ("IDGT") can provide further reductions in the grantor's federal estate taxable estate because the grantor would continue to be taxed on the income generated by assets held by the IDGT and such tax treatment would essentially represent additional gifts to the IDGT without any additional gift tax implications. In fact, the so-called "tax burn" from the grantor trust status that reduces the grantor's estate for years or decades after the transfer to the trust can be the most significant tax advantage of these transactions.
- h. Few, if any, planners contemplated that within a relatively short time, the federal estate tax exemption would be raised from $5 Million in 2012 to over $11 million per person (in 2018), thereby changing the focus for many from estate tax savings to achieving basis increases on the death of the grantor. The fear in 2012 was that the lifetime exemption would decrease to approximately $1 Million. But, as noted above, the pendulum may have again begun to swing in the opposite direction and the current high temporary exemption may be reduced substantially.
- i. What is unclear from the complaint is whether basis adjustments might still be achieved on the assets transferred to the grantor trusts. If the trusts at issue have powers of substitution that can still be exercised during the grantor's lifetime to swap out low basis assets (such as the real estate interests) for high basis assets

(such as cash) basis adjustment and avoidance of the income tax consequences of negative basis property might be achieved. Also unclear is whether removing the value of what appear to be appreciating assets would still make sense, given the fact that there is still a 40% federal estate on the excess over and above the grantor's lifetime estate and GST exemption. If the federal estate tax were to increase to 77% on the margin as recently proposed, the calculus of the impact of the transactions being challenged could be dramatically different.

- j. The plaintiffs in this case argue that the loss of basis adjustment on the grantor's death and income tax consequences potentially triggered on the change from grantor trust status to a complex trust were either not explained to them, or not understood by them.
- k. This is the second action filed relating to this estate plan. The first action, filed in March 2018 against Cohn Resnick, a national CPA firm, has been stayed so the law firm could be brought into the case. The plaintiffs have apparently, for now, opted not to bring the wealth management firm into the case as being responsible for whatever problems concern the taxpayer. But regardless of the outcome of this case, wealth managers everywhere, along with estate planners, and CPAs, should take heed and consider protective actions that might be implemented to their practice procedures regardless of the case's ultimate disposition.
- l. Analysis of Selected Portions of the Complaint
  - a. Practitioners should be aware of the issues alleged in the complaint. Apart from the outcome of the actual case, the allegations should raise concern among practitioners and serve as a catalyst to re-evaluate their policies and procedures.
  - b. "...defendants rendered negligent estate-planning and related advice to the plaintiffs, such that the plaintiffs have been harmed and are at imminent risk of further harm.
  - c. The defendants negligently failed to conduct a proper analysis of the risks and benefits of the estate plan they formulated for the plaintiffs, and negligently failed to apprise the plaintiffs of the risks inherent in conveying the plaintiffs' real estate ownership interests into dynasty trusts..."
  - d. "5 The defendants failed to determine, and failed to alert the plaintiffs, that conveying certain interests in real estate into dynasty trusts could eliminate the plaintiffs' ability to transfer assets with a "stepped up" basis, trigger phantom gains that create tax liabilities, cause losses relating to eliminating the depreciation reset of assets, and cause other damages."
- m. While the facts in the instant case are not yet known, practitioners might nonetheless begin considering strategic steps for their practices. Discussions of basis planning have been ubiquitous at estate planning conferences for many years, especially since the 2010 increase in the exemption amount to $5 million inflation adjusted. Even apart from what counsel did or did not advise, might it be reasonable that the issues of basis implications should have been known to such a sophisticated client? The clients operated a national real estate empire worth more than a billion dollars. The clients no doubt entered sophisticated real estate and lending transactions with complex terms and documents. They may have engaged in like-kind exchanges, which are transactions that also have implications to basis and the deferment of capital gain taxes. But perhaps the critical issue for practitioners generally, is how can it be demonstrated after the fact who said what to whom? Practical suggestions on how to address this are discussed below.

- n. Damages should be reasonably certain and not speculative in nature and emanate directly from the claimed breach of the professional standard of care. Here plaintiffs alleged that:
  - a. “6. The applicable standard of care requires that defendants know and apprise the plaintiffs of the consequences of the advice defendants provide and the implementation of that advice. Nonetheless, Mr. Weinstock and the Lowenstein firm failed, over a period of years, during the course of meetings, correspondence and telephone conferences with the plaintiffs, to appreciate these consequences or to advise the plaintiffs of them. This was a breach of the applicable standard of care, which was the proximate cause of damages to the plaintiffs...”
  - b. Despite the allegation, the triggering event appears to be the transfer of assets to a dynastic trust. Thereafter, what purpose would advice regarding the lack of a basis adjustment have provided, given that the funding had already occurred, unless a substitution of assets was contemplated and the death of the grantor was imminently predictable.
  - c. The actual issue is much more complex than the above sets forth. The plaintiffs’ allegations appear not to include any discussion pertaining to critical ancillary factors that have a significant impact on the tax results of the transaction: (a) the anticipated holding period for the properties; (b) how many properties were actually sold; (c) whether any involved like kind exchanges and the likelihood of future tax deferred exchange transactions; or (d) the tax imposed (that might otherwise have been avoided at the time of sale had the property not been held in a dynastic trust. Also, it appears that quantifying the potential for offsetting estate tax savings that could be saved on death had the tax laws not changed. The real analysis of the benefits or detriment of the planning should include a comparison of these and other factors.
  - d. As this article is being written, Democratic presidential hopefuls are competing with each other to devise the costliest tax regimes they can propose to tax the wealthy. For example, Elizabeth Warren has proposed a wealth tax. Might the assets already shifted to the dynasty trust escape what could be a 3% per year wealth tax? Or how about Bernie Sanders proposal to increase the estate tax to over 77% for persons of wealth over $1 billion, i.e. similar to the grantors of the estate plan at issue in this case. How would that offset the purported loss of basis step-up? While the outcome of a proposal that many might view as outlandish is uncertain, that is the whole point. The tax system is and has been uncertain and has changed frequently.

- e. An analysis of the many issues involved might reasonably entail a decision tree with probabilities assigned to each outcome discounted back to the transaction date. In reality this is rarely if ever done given the myriad of variables and uncertainties. Rather, simpler forecasts are sometimes prepared and the sensitivity analysis may be more “seat of the pants” even for very large transactions. The devastation of a potentially costly estate tax has often been the primary determinant of the planning to be undertaken. But practitioners, as discussed below, might wish to evaluate whether common prior approaches to evaluating planning and communicating issues to clients remain advisable.
- f. “8. When the “switch is flipped” on the dynasty trusts, grantor trusts are changed to complex trusts. When this occurs, either voluntarily or through the death of the grantor, the alter ego status between the grantors and the trusts is severed. This eliminates the ability for the grantors to swap assets in and out of the trusts without penalty, and creates a phantom gain tax liability. This results in substantial adverse tax consequences.”
- g. While this statement may be correct, the loss of the ability to swap is irrelevant if the properties are held long term. When might a sale occur that would implicate a lower basis as an issue? If the anticipated holding period for a property is 25 years, how material is a future capital gain on a present value basis? Sophisticated real estate developers are no doubt familiar with like-kind Code Section 1031 exchanges. To the extent that properties can be exchanged, the gain on a sale can be further deferred, perhaps indefinitely. So again, the tax cost of the tradeoff is that of when death occurs versus when a sale, which can be planned and further deferred through a like-kind exchange, might be incurred. Many of these decisions are within the control of the client, not the practitioner.
- h. “9. Because Lowenstein advised the Raiaes to place their real estate partnership interests into dynasty trusts, these assets in trust will not be deemed to be part of their respective grantors’ estates when the grantors pass away. As a consequence, the assets will not be treated with what is known as “stepped up” basis.
- i. Yes, but those assets might avoid an estate tax which the client’s had to have understood as a motivator for the planning. Further, the dynastic trusts may provide continuity, divorce, and creditor protections, which may have been a non-tax oriented goal of the grantor. In any event, which is preferable? How will the calculus change as property values, tax laws, and other factors evolve? This could all be integrated into a decision tree analysis of the many options and variables, but how can anyone measure the potential utility of any trust as an asset protection tool? While it can be described qualitatively, and even than subject to some uncertainty, those benefits are impossible to quantify.

- j. “12. The defendants’ negligent advice has adversely affected the management of the Raia family businesses in a number of respects, and will continue to have such effects. As a result of the tax implications described here, and a lack of liquidity available to swap out at-risk assets in the dynasty trust, the plaintiffs have had to liquidate partnership assets that they would not have otherwise had to do, had they received appropriate legal advice. Further, defendants’ advice has caused adverse economic consequences relating to, inter alia, the potential relocation of individuals and the family business, additional expenditure of legal and accounting fees, loss of depreciation resets, additional life insurance premiums, additional New Jersey income tax obligations, fees and costs relating to employees, loss of lifetime gifting capacity, and costs associated with attempted partial remedial measures.”
- k. Transferring business or real estate interests to an irrevocable trust obviously has to have consequences to the operations, distributions and access to the value of the assets so transferred. Is it counsel’s responsibility to evaluate the implications to business operations or the client? While it is possible that sophisticated and successful real estate developers did not understand the financial implications to funding swaps of trust assets it that plausible?
- l. The complaint about life insurance is somewhat surprising. Life insurance is commonly integrated into planning with GRATs, note sale transactions, spousal lifetime access trusts, etc. If GRATs are used, as in this plan, life insurance can be an ideal tool to address the estate tax that might be due if there is a premature death before the end of the GRAT term. Life insurance is commonly used not only to pay estate tax but to address basis issues on assets transferred to trusts, as in this case. Life insurance is also commonly used with clients with closely held business and real estate holdings as a means of creating liquidity and shifting some value outside the core business. In the context of “additional” life insurance premiums, what is additional if it is so commonly used?
- m. Real estate is a leveraged business. Real estate developers routinely refinance properties. Whether or not there was capacity to fund a swap is likely a matter that the family controlled. The discussions in the case suggest an expanding business. If the business was expanding wasn’t there borrowing capacity? Were any properties in their portfolio refinanced during the periods in question? If so, was it possible that those funds could have been directed to funding swaps.
- n. The plaintiffs claim a lack of liquidity to fund asset swaps. However, the firm website states the following: “Utilizes low to moderate financial leverage and takes little development risk.” If the business uses low leverage isn't there capacity to fund swaps? What about a sale by the trust to the grantor of the assets to put the assets back into their estate to garner a basis step-up?

- o. Holding periods is an interesting consideration to the analysis. If properties are sold before death basis step up is irrelevant. This, as noted above, is one of the factors that should be incorporated into the decision tree analysis of options and variables. Consider the following quotes from the family business' website:
  - i. "“We continually look for opportunities to harvest gains and redeploy equity.” - Samuel A. Raia
  - ii. For example, in October 2005, the Raias sold a medical office building on Prospect Avenue in Hackensack. The proceeds were used to acquire a 260-unit, class - A residential apartment community in Little Rock, Arkansas in January 2006. This was in addition to a 219-unit property in Wilmington, North Carolina they already owned and was followed quickly by the purchase of a 198-unit community in Charleston, South Carolina.
  - iii. "We continually look for opportunities to harvest gains and redeploy equity," Samuel Jr. explains.
  - iv. Again, we are a family firm focused in long term sustainable performance," meaning that we constantly scrutinize the portfolio's properties, performance, and strategies for holding, selling, acquiring, and refinancing assets.”
- p. If assets might be sold without regard to the date of death, those assets will not benefit from a step up in basis. It appears that the company strategically sells properties on a regular basis, as it says, they continually look for opportunities to harvest gains. So as part of the decision tree matrix to create to evaluate the various planning options and implications each property may have to be evaluated for the possibility of a pre-death sales. Further, the firm does focus on the “long term” so for other assets the future capital gains may be at such a distant time that the present value of the tax cost may be inconsequential. Additionally, the above transactions described on the firm website might have been structured as 1031 exchanges. Were they? But in all instances is it feasible or reasonable to expect that an estate planning attorney evaluate all these options? Even if the estate planner created a decision tree in an attempt to evaluate all these variables would that realistically provide a better analysis of the consequences?
- q. 31. “The years 2012 through 2016 were years of transition for the Raia family business. The family discussed these changes during family retreats and in other contexts. The business was in transition from a regional real estate entity to a national investment management platform. Lowenstein marketed its estate plan to the Raia family as an integral part of this transition.”

- r. Suggesting that counsel ”marketed” its plan and advice is certainly possible, although the facts have not yet been determined. Apart from the instant case, this allegation should be considered by practitioners who feel pressured by the need to produce revenue to be cautious of “marketing” a plan on or to any client. Perhaps the discussion of options with the client might deflect such an objection. If options are provided then it would seem more difficult for a client to argue the plan was pushed or marketed to them when the client had to decide as to which option to choose. Also, isn’t an option every client retains (and which many exercise) is not to pursue any planning?
- s. 33. “A Grantor Retained Annuity Trust (a “GRAT”) is an irrevocable trust established for a fixed number of years. A grantor contributes assets to a GRAT while retaining a right to receive the original value of the assets contributed to it, plus a certain annual rate of return (the “annuity”). If a grantor dies before the GRAT completes, the assets within the GRAT are treated as part of the taxable estate of the grantor. If the grantor is alive when the GRAT completes, that may trigger a taxable event with respect to the assets within the GRAT, a fact which had not been communicated to the Raia family when the GRATs were created.”
- t. The above allegations are not necessarily a correct characterization of the estate tax consequences of a GRAT for several reasons. From an income tax perspective, the trust on the back end of a GRAT can be structured to be a grantor trust as well. This could defer any income recognition, and continue the grantor trust tax burn, for years following the termination of the GRAT.
- u. The estate tax inclusion argument is not necessarily correct. If interest rates rise sufficiently from the date the GRAT was completed and funded until the date of death, the amount of the GRAT assets included in the estate is that amount necessary to generate the required annuity payment using the 7520 rate at the date of death. So, depending on the changes in interest rates and property values, factors no estate planner is charged with forecasting, substantially less than the full value of the property will be included in the grantor’s estate.
- v. Given the vicissitudes of the tax system all any planner can do is make his or her best guess based on experience, current law and guesses as to where and how the tax laws may evolve in their next iteration. All the same issues of estate tax, holding period, 1031 exchanges, and so forth discussed above all are relevant to this analysis. In addition, the grantor has a say, expresses intentions and makes choices based upon his own analysis of what the future may hold. Perhaps apart from the outcome of this case practitioners should more proactively be certain clients are informed of and acknowledge their responsibilities in the planning process.

- w. “47. The trusts were established in 2012. Before their creation, Mr. Weinstock and Lowenstein met with the Raia family on multiple occasions, corresponding with them at length about issues such as the structure of the dynasty trusts, what assets should be conveyed into them, and what the consequences of this course of action would be. The defendants advised that the principal benefit of creating the trusts would be mitigating the effects of estate taxes. Lowenstein provided the Raias with no adequate economic model or comparison that would convey the risks inherent in the estate plan it marketed. It concentrated only on the plan’s positive consequences.”
- x. Perhaps practitioners might endeavor to try to document potential risks and negative aspects of any plan proposed to clients some of the arguments in the complaint would be prevented in future situations.
- y. But how might counsel have constructed such a model? The client would have to be able to predict and delineate those properties they might sell before death and those that would be held until death, and those to be held later. This delineation could impact the analysis – but such predictions also may be adversely impacted by the vicissitudes of market changes and other economic and family dynamic factors. But even if that analysis could be done, other factors (such as asset protection) remain dynamic and relevant, but impossible to quantify. In addition, there remains the inability to predict the wide range of possible changes to income and estate tax regimes.
- z. Regardless of how this case resolves, perhaps the take-home message to practitioners is to make a more concerted effort to advise, and now document, negative tax aspects of a transaction. Suggestions to this end are discussed below.
- aa. “56. Mr. Weinstock and Lowenstein failed to understand, acknowledge or advise the plaintiffs concerning the income tax consequences that would ensue when the grantor status ceased.”
- bb. There remains much uncertainty in the profession as to the consequences of cessation of grantor trust status. Most commentators believe that there is no recognition of income if an instalment note remains outstanding on the death of the settlor who created the trust. Perhaps some believe it might. Certainly, if grantor trust status is turned off while an installment note created from the grantor’s sale to the trust remains outstanding gain may be triggered. This is in fact why monitoring cash flow to repay the note is something that is relevant to the ongoing administration of these plans. Also, repaying the note may deflect the risk of the IRS challenging the transaction that the note is a Code Section 2036 string bringing the entirety of the assets back into the estate. While we cannot be certain what the facts in the instant case were, or what was or was not disclosed, the law in this area, as in so many facets of estate planning, is uncertain, viewed differently by different practitioners, and so forth.

- cc. “After the trusts were established, Mr. Weinstock wrote a trust administration guide to Lawrence A. Raia regarding the Lawrence A. Raia Family Dynasty Trust. This letter was dated May 22, 2013. Mr. Weinstock wrote similar letters to the other grantors of the four other dynasty trusts.”
- dd. How many practitioners prepare trust administration guidelines? Certainly not enough to suggest that this could be a standard of practice. How likely then, is it for an attorney that goes beyond the standards of practice to neglect to inform a client of one of the most basic considerations of a plan, possible loss of basis step up on assets transferred to irrevocable trusts (at the time the trusts were contemplated and created) – discussions at later meetings would have been immaterial to the intent and considerations behind the creation of the plan.
- o. Estate Planning is By Nature Uncertain
  - a. Any estate planner, whether an attorney, CPA, wealth manager or insurance consultant, who reads this case must have the feeling in their stomach “there but for the grace of God, go I?” The tax laws are always in flux. Almost every new administration in Washington proposes and often enacts changes in the tax laws. President Obama’s Greenbook proposals recommended a $3.5 million exemption, severe restrictions on GRATs and a myriad of other planning techniques, could have dramatically changed the outcome of many estate tax plans. President Trump almost repealed the estate tax, but was forced to settle for doubling the already historically high exemption amount. The next administration might reverse the path and make the estate tax very harsh. And no one should forget 2010, the year with no estate tax. Should that provide clients that acted in anticipation of a change that did not occur a cause of action against their advisers? That would hardly be reasonable. The Proposed 2704 Regulations reducing or eliminating valuation discounts were withdrawn, but they might resurface if there is a Democratic administration after the 2020 election. Prior to the withdrawal of those proposed regulations estate planners, CPAs, wealth advisers around the country recommended that clients take immediate action to lock in discounts before they might be lost. Those proposed Regulations were withdrawn and actions taken solely because the potential impact of those proposed Regulations would have been done perhaps in error. The 2017 tax act, for many, changed the dynamic between income and estate tax planning for those under the estate tax exemption. Consequently, for those with estates under the estate tax exemption the focus changed to utilization of non-grantor trusts and step up basis planning. However, many wealthy advisers viewed the 2017 Tax Act as the confirmation that the estate tax will never be repealed. Others feel that if President Trump, with a Republican Congress, was unable to repeal the estate tax, it likely will never happen. Unfortunately, no adviser has a crystal ball - so what does all this mean for planners and their clients?

- b. Uncertainty is part of the fabric of the estate planning process. Clients must understand and accept this. But perhaps, again regardless of the outcome of this particular case, the point for practitioners to consider is how might standards of practice be changed to assure clients are made aware of these risks that every estate planner understands, and how can that be corroborated?
- p. Every Estate Plan is Subject to a Myriad of Variables and Options
  - a. The bottom line is that any form of tax planning is always subject to risks that the law may change, economic assumptions underlying the planning may change, client goals may evolve, family dynamics can transform, and any of the myriad of other assumptions underlying any plan can change. A change in interest rates can have a dramatic impact on the ultimate tax consequences of a GRAT. If the donor/settlor of a GRAT dies during the term of the GRAT the plan is often presumed to fail. To the contrary, as explained above, if the value of the assets inside the GRAT and interest rates have risen sufficiently less than all the GRAT assets will have to be included in the donor/settlor's estate. Yet what control does any practitioner have over the value of the assets or interest rates? At high levels of wealth planning, such as that in the instant case, when polling nationally known practitioners on the best approach or technique to use as part of a plan it is likely none will provide you with the identical answer.
  - b. In fact, on many seemingly commonly used planning points practitioners will disagree vehemently. For example, many large transactions incorporate defined value mechanisms. These have been so commonly used that some might presume that they are an assured approach or that there is a common approach. But there are myriads of approaches, each with a range of options, and many still result in disagreement at the higher echelons of the profession as to which is best. Consider:
    - c. Wandry clause – some view a Wandry clause as an assured result based on the tax court case. Others are skeptical as the IRS has non-acquiesced and they have had Wandry clauses challenged on audits. Others claim to have had significant success on audits. See discussion later in this monograph under “Wandry.”
    - d. To assure the transfer of all assets using a Wandry approach, one of the authors has combined a traditional Wandry with a sale of any interests not transferred as a result of the Wandry clause. Absent a secondary transfer might a successful Wandry create Powell implications?
    - e. The King case provides for an adjustment of the note used in a sale to avoid a gift. Some practitioners believe that this is a viable and safe approach. Others are less convinced as it is only a 10th circuit case. Some practitioners have their own spins on how the note adjustment might be crafted to avoid the implications of a Proctor issue.

- f. Some practitioners use, in lieu of a Wandry approach, a spill-over into a GRAT. They believe there is merit to this position as the GRAT is sanctioned in regulations. Other practitioners have expressed concern about this technique.
  - g. A marital trust is used in some instances as the receptacle for a spillover, but that too raises issues as to which type of trust might be advisable.
  - h. An incomplete gift trust is suggested by some as the optimal spillover receptacle. Some practitioners, however, are less comfortable with this approach.
  - i. There are many other variations and views.
  - j. The point of the above is that for almost all planning, especially at large levels of wealth, there are many different views. There is no consistency because the laws are unclear, and even clear laws are subject change.
- q. Implications and Practice Considerations.
- a. If the plaintiffs' allegations succeed it could undermine much of traditional estate tax planning. But regardless of the outcome of the case, practitioners might consider different approaches to planning and practice.
  - b. Tax planning is not a science with correct and incorrect solutions that can be confirmed in a laboratory. The estate planning "laboratory" includes the vicissitudes of changing tax laws, uncertainties over economic changes, the impact of how a client might operate a business successfully or not, family dynamics, and an infinite number of other details.
  - c. The reality is that estate planning is at best an art, not an exact science, and no practitioner should be held to an impossible standard. All any estate planner can do is a reasonable job based on the practitioner's perception of the facts (can family dynamics ever be "known"), the overall goals expressed by the client, and guestimates as to the future (when might an asset be sold, when might someone die, what might interest rates do, how might Congress change the tax law, how might the Treasury interpret the tax law in Regulations and other pronouncements, what stance might a particular IRS auditor take, and so on).
  - d. Ask any insurance consultant what the likelihood is that an illustration that accompanies an insurance policy will reflect the exact result that will be realized, and the answer is likely zero. That does not make it inadvisable to buy life insurance, but rather the purchaser must adhere to that old adage caveat emptor, and work with a competent insurance professional. The policy may not perform as illustrated, but it needs to be monitored periodically, and may nonetheless provide a valuable financial result. Is estate planning any different?

- e. How many clients have credit shelter trusts that were drafted when the estate tax exemption was $1 million, and which now provide no estate tax benefit but an income tax detriment because of loss of basis. Does that mean everyone who is an heir of those trusts has a claim to pursue against the adviser? Hopefully not (but the theory espoused by the plaintiffs in the instant case might suggest to the contrary). Practitioners who created those trusts did the best they could under the then known or guesstimate planning circumstances. If the clients heeded the same advice above for a life insurance policy, and periodically monitored the trust with their advisers, many or all of any adverse results might be mitigated (e.g. asset location decisions might suppress the appreciation inside the trust, appreciated assets might be distributed, etc.). Might practitioners suggest to clients to review their estate plans every year for changes in family dynamics, changes in the law and other circumstances which might impact their estate planning desires and the operation of their current plan. Shouldn't the failure of the client to heed such advice fall on the client – as opposed to the planner?
- r. Clients Must have Some Responsibility in their Planning
  - a. There is another disturbing issue underlying this case. Clients must be charged with some knowledge of what they are doing when it comes to planning. Clients should be held responsible to understand that there are risks inherent in any planning and it is their decision whether or not to accept those risks (known and unknown) and pursue planning. No client should be permitted to feign ignorance of fundamental aspects of planning. A very common estate planning transaction for many decades has been for an estate planning attorney to create an irrevocable trust to hold a life insurance policy. If that policy was a survivorship policy that is no longer relevant because of the increase in the estate tax exemption should the client be able to sue the attorney draftsman and the insurance agent? That would hardly be reasonable because it is not the adviser's fault that the estate tax laws changed, or that the client/insured inadvisably decided to live long enough for that to occur. But the client in that common plan is charged with, and should be accountable, to understand that tax laws change, one's lifespan is unpredictable, and there are simply no guarantees in planning. It would seem that attributing some knowledge to even an average estate planning client is logical, fair and is commonly done.
  - b. In the instant case, a billion dollar family empire claims to have not understood the implications that transferring assets could prevent a basis step-up on death? For clients of that wealth level is that reasonable? Further, consider the background of just a few of the family members:
    - i. "I went to college for business management, while Lawrence obtained a B.S. degree in civil engineering and an MBA, and Samuel has a B.S. degree in public accounting and an MBA, he continues... Samuel headed the office with particular focus on finance and accounting... We continually traveled the country visiting other operations as well as keeping abreast of developments overseas in order to remain on the cutting edge of innovations like superplasticizers and other additives that create extremely high-strength design mixes. And with our educational backgrounds in modern management, accounting, and information technology principles, we had a much more efficient operation than most competitors.”

- c. Is it reasonable for such sophisticated clients, which is not atypical of large families that routinely engage in sophisticated estate planning such as GRATs, note sales, etc., to argue that they did not understand basic tax considerations?
- s. What Measures Might Practitioners Consider?
  - a. While it is too soon to anticipate the outcome of this case, there are important lessons to be learned. Several practitioners with whom the case was discussed merely dismissed it as an aberration that will be dismissed or settled. But is that really a prudent perspective? What is the toll on any practitioner embroiled in a malpractice case? What is the loss to time, reputation and earnings even if the case is proven baseless? The costs are incredibly high. So, the question becomes what practical lessons might practitioners learn for this case, regardless of outcome, and how might practitioners change the standards of practice and respond?
  - b. No doubt many will dismiss the suggestions below as extreme or unwarranted. But is that really a prudent response? Several practitioners expressed concern that “Clients will be put off and may not proceed.” Well, if a client is put off by being informed of the risks inherent in estate planning generally, and for the transactions they are considering more particularly, perhaps that client should not proceed. If a practitioner feels the suggested steps are excessive consider the far more restrictive limitations that the allied professions put on their work? In many plans the estate planning attorney may be the only adviser with liability not limited to his or her fees! With that being the environment practice has evolved to, a mere disclaimer informing a client of risks is nothing by comparison with what the other allied professions do. This is discussed in further length below.
  - t. Additional estate planning practice considerations practitioners might consider.
    - a. Apart from how practitioners with whom we discussed this case believe it might resolve, an analysis of the case might suggest that some advisers consider practice management changes. Some of these are traditional practice management or risk prevention recommendations, some are new or spins on traditional suggestions in light of discussions surrounding the cases.

- b. How can a practitioner corroborate verbal discussions? Now, in the wake of the instant case (also see a similar issue raised in the Smith case below), practitioners may now need to document risks that in the past they, and especially the clients, would have preferred not reducing to writing. So, however the instant case resolves, clients may be harmed in the future as practitioners adopt more protective practices.
- c. Consider creating and using additional procedures to disclose risk factors. In the heyday of the tax shelter syndication days in the 1980s every private placement memo had a long risk factors section in the front of the document. While many of these points were boilerplate in most deals, better crafted private placement memorandum also had customized risks associated with the particular transaction. Perhaps some practitioners might consider the use of a somewhat generic, somewhat customized, list of risk factors. Sending a “Listing of Some Risk Factors that May Affect Your Plan” prophylactically to clients who wish to engage in various estate planning endeavors (such as DAPTs, SLATs, IDGTs, GRATs, etc.) might prove helpful in explaining some of the risks involved in a proposed plan. Such a step would also clearly seem to communicate to the client that there are risks involved in every estate plan. It is also important to remember that while that doing so might be helpful, it is not presently standard practice nor required. While nothing requires a practitioner to lay out all issues in writing, and in fact there may be reasons not to provide the IRS (and perhaps other creditors) with a roadmap as to the purposes and intentions behind an estate plan, later proving the advice and cautionary comments provided by the professional to the client (after the client has died or become incapacitated) may be difficult without some level of contemporaneously created documentary evidence.
- d. Consider use of Illustrations Where the Assumptions are Highlighted. Perhaps use of illustrations, that reflect how the plan is contemplated to work which also identify the assumptions made in the creation of the illustration would be helpful, especially if such illustrations reflect that changes in the law, or the client’s circumstances, may impact the implications and effect of the plan. Not only are illustrations a helpful means of demonstrating the impact of sensitivity analysis on a plan (e.g. if interest rates rise, cash flow from the business, etc.) but perhaps practitioners should consider how allied professions handle projections. It is standard practice for wealth advisers, trust companies and insurance consultants to have disclaimers on the face of each page of a plan or forecast and a page or more of caveats and limitations at the end. If the estate planning attorney does not have the skills to create forecasts the models created by other advisers, along with their accompanying caveats and limitations may serve to inform the client of the potential risks, and perhaps to safeguard all advisers on the team.

- e. Consider modifying engagement letters and retainer agreements. Consider revising your standard forms and adding express language cautioning clients that tax laws are uncertain, change with frequency, have varying interpretations and so on. Incorporating these significant and general caveats into standard agreements might enhance the likelihood that a client would have to understand, and could not deny, that no planning result was guaranteed.
  - f. Regardless, whether you decide to send a “Risk Factors” memorandum/checklist sent to each client or use illustrations, these should merely be supplements to the traditional memorandum and letters that practitioners historically have utilized to caution clients about risks and issues in their planning and transactions.
- u. Practice Safer Writing
- a. Given the nature of a number of the issues raised in the complaint in the instant case perhaps practitioners might possibly consider being [phraseology intentional] more attentive to the choice of words used in letters and memorandum.
  - b. In the complaint it states: “In this memorandum, Mr. Weinstock stated that the recommendations “are designed to achieve the following planning goals to the maximum possible extent [highlight added]”
  - c. Given the nature of the litigious environment we apparently face, perhaps practitioners should instead of phrases like the above instead use language like: “.....may achieve some of the following planning goals.....”
  - d. Perhaps we all should banish the use words like “assured,” “will,” “optimal,” “maximum,” and instead only use words suggestive of possible results. While clients no doubt prefer shorter and clearer language, is it worth the risk? Certainly, if we state that net tax savings “might” be achieved that suggests that they also might not be.
  - e. Given the incredible technical nuances of the tax laws, and the ongoing changes in laws, not only by acts of Congress, but by new IRS pronouncement, case law, etc. all of which any client should understand exist, nothing should be presumed by a client to be assured or without risk.
- v. Engagement Letter/Retainer Agreement Considerations
- a. The complaint against the accounting firm included the following: “Prior to the execution of the letter on behalf of Raia Properties Corporation by Jim D' Aiuto, Lawrence C. significantly modified it, via initialed handwritten interlineation, striking out a portion of the letter relating to whether J.H. Cohn could use Raia Properties' name and contact information in marketing materials. Accordingly, the letter executed by Mr. D' Aiuto was not the same agreement that previously had been executed by Ira S. Herman. Therefore, the engagement agreement of March 20, 2012, is not a binding contract in any respect upon any plaintiff, since there was no meeting of the minds and because the parties to the agreement signed different agreements.”

- b. The exclusion of a marketing authorization to use a firm or client name might be viewed as tangential or even superfluous to the remainder of an engagement letter. Is that really a sufficient basis to negate the entirety of an agreement?
- c. Perhaps if a client marks changes on an engagement letter the practitioner should consider whether or not to engage with the client or reject the engagement. If the engagement will proceed perhaps all parties should initial all changes to avoid such an argument. But, if knowing that the client made changes to the engagement letter, the practitioner proceeded and the client performed (via payment pursuant to the terms of the engagement), might that not reflect “offer and acceptance”, and importantly “reliance” by both parties as to the terms and conditions of the engagement?
- d. Another approach might be to provide in the engagement letter that if a client modified any term, the remainder of the agreement if signed shall be binding, and the modified provisions shall not bind the professional if he or she does not agree in writing to the change by initialing it. The engagement letter might further provide that if a change is made it doesn’t affect the remainder of the agreement.
- w. Engagement Letter/Retainer Agreement Additional Provisions
  - a. Practitioners might wish to expand their retainer agreements to include language that confirms that there are risks with all plans and that all possible risks are not enumerated. Consider:
  - b. “No Guarantee/Risks: Results of any plan are not guaranteed. Many aspects of many, if not most, estate and related plans are not only uncertain, but subject to a wide spectrum of different views by other advisers, the courts, the IRS, and other authorities. Most strategies have negative consequences (e.g. save estate tax, lose basis step-up). Many common strategies, techniques and transactions are subject to tax as well as other legal, financial, and other risks and uncertainties. While we endeavor to identify some of the risks of a plan, all risks and issues with each component of a plan are not possible to identify or communicate. Creating a collaborative team may help identify more issues. Further, the fact that we communicate verbally or in writing certain risks should never be interpreted as an indication that any such listing or communication is a comprehensive listing or communication of every risk involved. The risks of any transaction can be further compounded by improper administration of the plan, a failure to regularly review and update the plan in order to address changes in the tax and other laws that may reduce hoped for benefits or even result in more costly results than had no planning been pursued as well as the potential implications of changed goals, desires and family and business objectives. Annual or other meetings with a collaborative advisor team may help identify existing or new risks and help to identify provisions of the plan (or its administration) that may be beneficial in addressing changes in the law and mitigation of risks, but even such vigilance will not provide certainty. The failure to regularly re-evaluate the plan with the assistance and input of a collaborative team of advisers may have adverse consequences and result in your plan failing to succeed.”

- c. Practitioners might wish to expand their retainer agreements to include language that confirms that tax audit risks exist with all plans and that the client will be responsible for the costs of such an audit. Consider:
- d. “Audit and other Risks: To the extent that you engage us, or engaged us in the past, to perform tax, estate, asset protection and other planning, which may include, or may have included, estate, gift, wealth preservation and/or wealth transfer planning and other services, we may have suggested a number of strategies, and may have assisted in implementing strategies, that the IRS or state tax authorities, or others, could challenge. Possible challenges could be asserted even though we communicated several of the risks associated with such strategies. Possible challenges could be asserted also for risks that were not discussed, including challenges by the government that could cause inclusion of assets previously transferred out of your estate in your estate. Assets that had been transferred out of the estate as part of the recommended strategies will most likely not be adjusted to their date of death value, which could result in a capital gains tax liability, possibly a depreciation recapture tax liability, and/or a negative capital account recapture liability. You agree that we shall not be liable, to any extent, for any assessments of tax, interest, or penalties resulting from recommended strategies or previously implemented strategies.”
- x. Billing Considerations
  - a. Many common billing programs permit adding standard text, e.g. footers, to certain types of bills or even to all bills. Consider adding some variation of the above “no guarantee” provision and “audit” provision as a standard footer to all bills. Clients reminded of these limitations on each bill, especially if they pay the bill without objection, may have a more difficult time maintaining that they were not aware of these risks and limitations on what the practitioner can provide.
- y. Caveat to All Memorandum
  - a. Has any financial firm, trust company wealth adviser, or life insurance firm ever issued a forecast, memorandum or other client specific communication without cautionary language? But why is the same procedure not routinely used by estate planning attorneys and CPAs?

Perhaps it should be. No client has ever authorized an unlimited budget for a memorandum, so every memorandum is necessarily constrained by the time and budget limitations. That assuredly has to limit the issues that can be identified and the research that can be done. Given the inherent uncertainties of the estate planning process, many memoranda can simply not provide assurance on some or many of the points addressed. It appears that the instant case raises issues from a client who states these uncertainties and limitations were not communicated. Again, regardless of the outcome of the case, shouldn't practitioners confirm that they have informed their clients that risks exist, not all can be identified and that no assurance as to results can be provided?

- b. Consider the situation noted above with respect to a credit shelter trust that did not provide the estate tax benefit because of changes in the estate tax exemption amount (but yet again that credit shelter trust might provide tax benefit if the exemption is reduced), but mere damages alone should not result in a practitioner being responsible.
- c. If the instant case suggests that an estate planner must outline to the client every possible adverse event that might result from the strategy proposed that is impossible to address. This is not only impractical, no one can foresee every possible issue. Moreover, few clients would want to pay the cost for this type of analysis, nor is it necessarily prudent to leave a possible roadmap of issues for the IRS (but more of a roadmap may now be necessary if that is what practitioners reasonably might need to do to protect themselves).
- d. Perhaps practitioners might add a paragraph on risks and issues to cover letters used to transmit wills, trusts and other significant estate planning documents. That paragraph might address:
  - i. Estate planning is inherently complex, subject to varying interpretations, and laws that frequently change.
  - ii. Ongoing review and maintenance of every plan and document is essential.
  - iii. There is no assurance that any particular result will be realized.
  - iv. There are risks and negative consequences to every planning step and technique, all of which have not been enumerated in this letter or other communications.
  - v. By proceeding with this plan, you accept these risks.
- z. Consider the possible language for inclusion on estate planning memorandum:
  - a. Disclaimer Statements and Risks
  - b. Limitation to Client: This Planning Memorandum is solely for the benefit of the client named above and is not to be relied upon by anyone else without the written consent of Shenkman Law. We assume no responsibility for income tax, gift tax or estate tax, or any other consequences, to any other persons. Such persons should consult and rely upon their own counsel, accountant, tax advisor or other advisors. Except for the information expressly stated herein (and no statements herein are to be construed as legal opinions), no other suggestions, information or analysis is implied, and no other suggestions, information or analysis should be inferred. Any strategies suggested are intended solely for the use of the client named above, and cannot be relied upon by others.

- c. Matters in Purview of other Advisers: Although we may address certain income tax consequences, those matters are within the purview of your CPA and should be addressed as such. Although we may address certain insurance matters or investment matters, those matters are within the purview of your insurance and/or investment adviser, and should be addressed as such. Although we may address certain real estate or corporate (entity) matters, those matters are within the purview of your general counsel (or your specific real estate or corporate counsel) and should be addressed as such.
- d. Information Will Not Suffice to Avoid Tax Penalties or Interest Charges: The information in this memorandum, in any attachment, or cover letter (including previous and subsequent correspondence during this engagement) are not intended or written to be used, and it cannot be used to: i) avoiding any penalties imposed by the IRS or any state tax authority; ii) to promote, market or recommend to any other party any tax-related matter such as an investment, product, service, advice or position.
- e. Scope Limitations: The scope of this Planning Memorandum is expressly limited to the strategies or matters discussed herein. No other issues are considered and Shenkman Law assumes no responsibility beyond the issues to which this Planning Memorandum is devoted. Additionally, no analysis is provided on any of the following issues: (1) any impact of future legislation or other changes in the law, whether retroactive in nature or not; (2) any issues specifically excluded; (3) non-US taxes, or taxes in jurisdictions not specifically mentioned; and (4) any taxes not specifically mentioned; (4) life insurance or other insurance selection; (5) recommendations of investment products, securities or strategies; (6) Medicaid, elder law, supplemental needs or special needs planning; (7) qualified plan issues; (8) annuities; (9) valuation reports or issues; (10) any other matter excluded in the Billing Arrangement documents or other communications.
- f. Law Changes: The suggestions and discussions in this Planning Memorandum are based upon the applicable federal, state and local tax and other laws as of the date of this Planning Memorandum. Such authority may change in the future, and such change may be applied retroactively. A change in state law may impact income, estate or other tax consequences. Shenkman Law assumes no responsibility to update this memorandum, or notify you in any manner, if the applicable law changes.

Federal and state taxing authorities, regulatory agencies, the IRS, and the courts are not bound by the analysis herein and may take very different views or interpretations of the law, the facts or both. The analysis contained herein supersedes all prior oral and written discussions, if any, pertaining to the issues involved. But it may be modified by subsequent communications. We may have suggested a number of strategies the IRS or state tax authorities, other governmental agencies, regulatory bodies or courts may challenge. While we have discussed a number of associated risks with you, possible challenges could be asserted which were or were not discussed or even contemplated. We are not responsible or liable, to any extent, for any gift tax, income tax or estate deficiencies or assessments, interest, or penalties that may arise, or the results of any court holding including the piercing or disregarding of entities, trusts or transactions. There may now be proposed Federal, state tax or other legislation which, if enacted, could modify or eliminate the benefits of many strategies if not grandfathered. The IRS, state tax authorities, plaintiff's counsel, and others have, and may continue to, attack various strategies and techniques that may be suggested in this Planning Memorandum.

- g. Your Responsibilities: We have relied upon your assertion that the information provided, facts and assumptions provided are true, correct, and complete. However, we have not independently audited or otherwise verified any of the information, facts or assumptions, though we may have asked for clarification, done internet or other searches or consulted with your other advisers. A misstatement or omission of any fact or a change or amendment in any of the assumptions we have relied upon may require a modification of all or a part of the discussions or suggestions contained in the Planning Memorandum. In addition, our suggestions and discussions are based on the facts and assumptions as asserted to us by you and are at best only current as of the date of this Planning Memorandum. We have no responsibility to update this Planning Memorandum, or otherwise notify you, for events, circumstances or changes in any of the facts or assumptions occurring after the date of this Planning Memorandum or the date of any communication to you. It is the responsibility of the client to engage Shenkman Law or another adviser to revisit these matters from time to time, especially if our general communications or general media coverage suggests a change in the law, planning approaches or perspectives that might affect you, your planning or the discussions or suggestions in this Planning Memorandum. It is your responsibility to consider all communications we disseminate as well as general media coverage of events and contact us should any perhaps apply to you, your planning or this Planning Memorandum.

- h. Options; Your Decision: Although we aid you in the decision-making process, suggest alternative recommendations verbally or in writing to help you achieve your objectives, and assist you in determining how well each alternative meets your estate planning objectives, the responsibility for estate planning decisions is solely yours. These services are not designed, and should not be relied upon, as a substitute for your own judgment, nor are they meant to mitigate the necessity of ongoing review. These services are designed to supplement your own planning and analysis and aid you in achieving your objectives.
- aa. Other Lessons for Practitioners
  - a. This is reminiscent of the old tax shelter days in the 1980s when the private placement memorandum included a risks discussion that endeavored to list every possible issue. Is that to become the standard of practice? Assume that a client undertakes planning to create a simple non-grantor trust to salvage a charitable contribution deduction in light of the new high exemption. It is not only the tax provisions in the trust that are relevant to determine whether the terms of the trust meet the governing instrument requirements. But will the trust be administered properly paying donations out of income to meet the Code Section 642(c) requirements? Etc.
  - b. Risk factors, similar to common practice in private placement memoranda, might include several different categories and enumerate risks by those categories. These standard risk factor provisions could be modified as appropriate for each client situation. For what might now be a comment default one-fund QTIP trust with a disclaimer to a credit shelter a rather standard set of risk factors could be crafted and used for a large number of clients.
  - c. Practitioners may wish to consider sending every client a generic “Risk Factors” memorandum, somewhat tailored to the client situation, that lists commonly perceived risk factors. Perhaps that checklist or memorandum should be labeled “Attorney Client Privilege” when attorneys send it. But given that this case might ensnare CPAs, wealth and other advisors, not all advisors will be afforded such protections. Regardless of whether or not such a “Risk Factors” includes every risk, it will assuredly make clear to the client that the transaction faces numerous risks and uncertainties, as most transactions do. Educating clients as to the uncertainty of the tax system, and hence the uncertainty as to any planning outcome, is perhaps a point that we as a profession have not made sufficient effort in the past to do, and perhaps in the wake of the instant case, should endeavor to do.
- bb. Some sample risk factors to consider disclosing might include:
  - a. Assets transferred to irrevocable trusts will not, absent further action, be included in the transferor’s estate and will not be afforded a step up in basis at death.

- b. If a trust has a power of substitution, unless that power is monitored and exercised it will provide no benefit to achieve a basis step-up on death.
- c. Powers of substitution are inherently subject to a myriad of risks. If the valuation of the assets swapped or substituted is not identical the IRS may challenge the transaction. If a swap power substituting assets is exercised in a manner that can shift benefits among the trust beneficiaries it may trigger tax problems.
- d. Several tax cases have expanded the risk of estate inclusion of assets under a challenge that the decedent “in conjunction with” others was able to control the use or enjoyment of assets or entity interest. The scope and reach of this argument is uncertain.
- e. The irrevocable trust has been structured as a “grantor trust” for income tax purposes. Therefore, while it is contemplated that the assets funded to the trust will not be taxed as part of the grantor’s estate for estate tax purposes, income generated by the trust will be taxed to the grantor while the trust retains grantor trust status during the grantor’s lifetime. Such treatment, while potentially enhancing the value of the irrevocable trust for the benefit of its beneficiaries can result in depletion of the grantor’s estate over time which could cause cash flow and other financial hardships.
- f. We have only represented the grantors in this matter and not the current or future beneficiaries.
- g. We recommend that you have a forensic analysis done to corroborate that the transfers to the trust were not fraudulent conveyances, but you have elected not to do so.
- h. We recommend that you have an actual life analysis conducted with regard to each grantor by an independent firm to document estimated life expectancy based upon the grantor’s actual health factors, as opposed to reliance on standard life expectancy tables (which are generally at least 10 years out of date from their inception). This may be relevant to the IRS respecting various components of the transaction, such as planning the term of GRATs, the term of notes, etc.
- i. You were advised not to hold any powers or control over entity decisions to make distributions or liquidate as retaining such powers could have an adverse impact upon the effectiveness of the plan.
- j. We are not admitted to practice in [list jurisdictions] and have relied on local counsel for such matters.
- k. A gift tax return must be filed adequately disclosing all aspects of all transactions if the statute of limitations for an audit is to run. Those returns should also allocate GST exemptions [or opt out of automatic allocation].
- l. The defined value mechanisms used in the transactions to deflect a valuation challenge by the IRS may not be respected. The IRS has challenged these and may again do so.

- m. You should expect a gift tax audit. This will entail significant additional professional fees none of which are included in the fees billed to date and a separate engagement for such services accompanied by additional fees will be required. An audit may require the involvement of appraisers, litigators, and others. The result of an audit could be costly and unpredictable.
- n. GRATs must be administered precisely in accordance with the regulations, including but not limited to the proper payment of the periodic annuity payment and not making additional gifts to the GRAT after its initial funding. The IRS may argue that a spill-over of value into the GRAT as part of a defined value mechanism is a second prohibited contribution at a later date and not respect the documentation indicating that the excess values are transferred as of the date of the closing. We will not monitor nor record such payments; consequently, you or another adviser must do so.
- o. The IRS may not respect the use of an incomplete gift trust as part of a defined value mechanism.
- p. Notes in note sale transactions must be adhered to and interest paid in accordance with the terms of each note. We will not monitor nor record such payments; consequently, you or another adviser must do so.
- q. The value of the properties may not increase as anticipated undermining the goals for the transactions.
- r. If you die while your grantor trust owes you a note from a note sale transaction the IRS may argue that the remaining gain on that note is triggered on death. While many commentators disagree with this position there is no assurance how an audit of this might conclude.
- s. If you own negative basis real estate and transfer these assets to a grantor trust, the cessation of grantor trust status might trigger taxable gain.
- t. The IRS could challenge the valuation of assets as to actual value and discounts.
- u. The tax laws are almost assured to change during the course of the transactions and it is impossible to anticipate how those changes may affect the transactions planned for.
- v. Family dynamics can change, and those changes may render parts or the entirety of a plan undesirable or less than optimal.
- w. You may wish to inform all heirs of the overall nature of the plan so that they understand the trusts involved and the potential impact on any future inheritance.
- x. As you acknowledged in our engagement letter we are not guarantors of results. All the planning undertaken faces an array of tax, legal, and other risks.
- y. There are assuredly other risks and issues which we have not identified in this partial listing. This listing is not intended to supplant or otherwise undermine other verbal, email, and written communications we have provided during the course of the engagement that identify additional risks and considerations.

- z. Informing clients that the outcome is not fully predictable, puts them on notice that they are assuming some level of risk. The planner is not a guarantor of outcomes, but rather a professional who attempts to integrate the client's stated desires with available options selected by the client, as the client would determine for any other business endeavor or decision.
- cc. Limitations Allied Professionals Incorporate into Their Retainer Agreements
- a. Assume that an estate planning is involved in a complex estate plan for a large client. The planning, as it almost invariably has to be, involves a planning team consisting of the attorney, CPA, appraiser and wealth adviser. What are the respective liability exposures of each of these professionals? The attorney cannot limit his or her liability as that would violate rules governing attorney ethics. The CPA and appraiser may include, and many do, stringent limitations on their liability on the matter. They may limit the dollar value of their liability to their fees earned, or perhaps even just to a portion of the fees involved. They might also limit the time period during which a claim can be brought, providing further protection. The wealth adviser may limit its liability by stating clearly that it does not provide legal or tax advice thereby perhaps shifting the burden back to the attorney and CPA (with the CPA but not the attorney having its liability limited to the fee it earns). Assuming a trust company is involved in a directed trustee capacity. That is common in planning transactions for closely held business interests, real estate and other private equity type assets. As a directed trustee the institutional trustee may have liability that is subject to a willful conduct standard. Willful misconduct is more than no liability as the absence of liability might negate the existence of a valid trust. However, willful misconduct is something less than good faith. Not a particularly high standard. The point of this is that the estate planning attorney may be the only person that has not, and cannot, limit liability. There seems to be something inherently unfair and inappropriate in that result. The only one of the allied estate professionals with substantial liability is the attorney.
  - b. Sample clause: Our sole obligation shall be to correct any non-conformance with the services provided, provided that you give us written notice within 36 months after the services are performed. The notice will specify and detail the non-conformance and, if you and we agree that a non-conformance exists, we will have a reasonable amount of time, correct the non-conformance. Our total liability relating to the professional services provided will in no event exceed an amount equal to the fees we receive for the engagement, and will not include any special, consequential, incidental or exemplary damages or loss, lost profits, or lost business opportunity.

- dd. A caution to financial advisers, wealth advisers and trust companies.
  - a. The state of the wealth management industry has evolved but perhaps not all practices have kept pace with that evolution. That creates risks that some in the industry may not have fully evaluated. The instant case provided the following with respect to wealth advisers involved:
  - b. “We note, pursuant to Rule 4:5-1(b), that entities other than the defendants named here and ...were involved in rendering related advice and in related conduct. Such persons are ...The Private Bank, J.P. Morgan. However, it is our view that their involvement was such that they should not be made a part of this lawsuit.”
  - c. Regardless of the outcome of the instant case, the mention of the wealth adviser in the plan should cause concern to wealth advisers, financial planners, and the like. It is not uncommon for wealth advisers and trust companies to provide comprehensive planning advice. Consider the following from a major firm’s website:
  - d. “Estate Planning & Trust...How can you turn your dreams into a tangible plan of action that incorporates all aspects of your financial and personal life? See how our estate planning and trust services can help you accomplish your many goals....Planning for the future...Our planning services are fully integrated to meet your many objectives...Estate planning and strategic wealth transfer...Let us help develop a plan to efficiently transfer wealth to your heirs and favorite charities, protect your family and business, grow your assets, and minimize taxes.”
- ee. If a wealth adviser advertises that it provides comprehensive financial and estate planning services, serves as the trustee of one or more of the trusts involved in the plan, has in house attorneys review the trust instruments involved in the transaction, provides standard clauses it insists are inserted into the governing instruments, has a financial adviser review the plan, and does financial forecasts that address the plan), are integral to the financial underpinnings of the plan, can they really avoid responsibility for these types of claims? As more wealth advisers provide broader and deeper services that overlap the tax planning of CPAs, the estate planning provided by attorneys, etc., the risk they face may also commensurately increase. Therefore, the recommendations offered in this article may also be considered applicable by wealth advisers. Wealth advisers might consider:
  - a. Adding to the caveats and limitations that accompany reports and memorandum.
  - b. Following up on meetings with written summaries containing disclaimer language rather than relying on what cautions were verbally stated at a meeting.

- c. Providing clients with planning risk factors to educate clients as to the fact that risk is inherent in all estate plans.
- d. Encourage clients to meet periodically with all of their advisor team, not just the wealth adviser's internal team, in order to have the team identify and address risk factors and to corroborate that the other advisers, not just the wealth adviser, were regularly involved in the planning and administration. If wealth advisers do not provide tax and legal advice, then encouraging (perhaps insisting) that clients meet with their entire advisor team may be a useful means of demonstrating that the tax and legal advisers were in fact involved.
- e. It would be beneficial to the client, and their ability to understand and analyze risks, to have meetings with the client that include all of the professionals involved in creating, implementing and monitoring the plan. This should include the client's financial advisors, counsel and CPA, and any other professionals deemed relevant to the process. Such meetings, when conducted at regular intervals, may identify issues as they arise and provide options for proactively addressing them.
- ff. Might Arbitration Provide an Option?
  - a. In light of the risks, perhaps the disproportionate risks, estate planning attorneys face, should including a mandatory arbitration clause in engagement letters be viewed as a possible option?
  - b. Apart from the issues as to whether mandatory arbitration is permissible, perhaps the preliminary threshold question is, if it is feasible, might it help? The answers are not at all clear. Several litigation attorneys advised that they viewed arbitration as ineffectual and not a preferable approach to mitigate liability exposure for estate planning attorneys. Others disagree. Some believe that arbitration may provide quicker resolution at lower cost.
  - c. Another issue practitioners have to consider is whether their state ethics rules might proscribe the inclusion of a mandatory arbitration provision in their client retainer agreements.
  - d. A New Jersey case examined the enforceability of an arbitration clause for a malpractice claim in a retainer agreement.<sup>53</sup> The Court stated:
  - e. "Darcy Smith, Ph.D., hired and fired a string of four lawyers in connection with her divorce. She later sued in the District of New Jersey all four attorneys and their respective law firms for malpractice. Three settled, but one attorney, Marc A. Calello, asked the District Court to enforce an arbitration provision in his representation agreement with Smith. The District Court obliged, staying Smith's action and compelling arbitration.

<sup>53</sup> The author thank Professor Mitchell B. Gans and Jonathan G. Blattmachr for this suggestion and identification of the case discussed. Darcy Smith, Ph.D v. Cynthia Borsella Lindemann, Esq., US Court Of Appeals 3rd Cir., No. 16-3357, Sept 21, 2017. One should note that, in evaluating the precedential value of this case, the opinion states: "This disposition is not an opinion of the full Court and pursuant to I.O.P. 5.7 does not constitute binding precedent." Moreover, different jurisdictions view and may treat mandatory arbitration clauses differently.

- f. Smith contends that the provision is unenforceable because New Jersey law does not permit the arbitration of malpractice claims against attorneys brought by their former clients, and, even if New Jersey law did permit arbitration of her claims, this provision fails because it does not specifically use the word “malpractice.” Accordingly, she asks us to reverse the District Court or, in the alternative, to certify to the Supreme Court of New Jersey the question whether arbitration provisions like the one in her agreement are enforceable.”
- g. Some of the language used by the attorney in this case is reproduced below, and might be of interest to practitioners seeking this avenue of protection:
- h. “Arbitration of Differences Between the Client and the Law Firm. Should any difference..., disagreement, or dispute between you and the Law Firm arise as to its representation of you, or on account of any other matter, you agree to submit such disagreements in binding arbitration. Signing of this Agreement will be deemed your consent to the methods of alternative dispute resolution set forth in this Section, and constitutes a waiver on your part and on the part of the Law Firm to have such disputes resolved by a court which might include having the matter determined by a jury.”
- i. The legal issue with using a mandatory arbitration clause is that the ethical rules governing attorneys in many jurisdictions, including in New Jersey where the above case was litigated, prohibit mandatory arbitration clauses.
- j. “The [Federal Arbitration Act (“FAA”)] federalizes arbitration law and ‘creates a body of federal substantive law establishing and regulating the duty to honor an agreement to arbitrate[.]’” John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Olick, 151 F.3d 132, 136 (3d Cir. 1998) (quoting Moses H. Cone Mem. Hosp. v. Mercury Constr. Corp., 460 U.S. 1, 25 n. 32 (1983)). Thus, as the Supreme Court has repeatedly reaffirmed, “[w]hen state law prohibits outright the arbitration of a particular type of claim, the analysis is straightforward: The conflicting rule is displaced by the FAA.”
- k. “The Court did explain that for the arbitration clause to be binding the client must be “fully apprised of the advantages and disadvantages of arbitration” and “give her informed consent” to the arbitration provision. ABA Comm’n on Ethics & Prof’l Responsibility, Formal Op. 02- 425 (2002).”
- l. In evaluating the precedential value of the case, it should be noted that the case states: “This disposition is not an opinion of the full Court and pursuant to I.O.P. 5.7 does not constitute binding precedent.”
- m. Thus, practitioners should be certain that if they are going to include a mandatory arbitration clause in their attorney client agreements, the agreements should include the language necessary to provide clients with informed consent that they understand they are waiving their right to have their claims resolved by a court.

- n. Attorneys should also confirm with their malpractice insurance carriers before adding an arbitration clause to their attorney-client agreements. Some carriers bar such clauses in their insured's attorney-client agreements. One carrier responded: "The insurance company responded to your query on adding an arbitration agreement to your contracts and advised this is acceptable.
  - o. An illustrative policy attorney malpractice policy provision that relates mostly to arbitration might be:
    - i. "The Insured shall follow the Company's direction regarding whether to accept or reject a demand for arbitration of any Claim, and shall not voluntarily agree to arbitrate a Claim without the Company's written consent. No Insured shall, except at the Insured's own cost, make any payment, make any admission, admit liability, waive any rights, settle any Claim, assume any obligation or incur any expense without the prior written consent of the Company. All Insureds agree to tender any Claim covered by this Policy to any other insurers or indemnitors which may provide defense or indemnity coverage for such Claim."
  - p. The carrier advised that the purpose of this clause is to ensure that the claim is timely reported and all investigation/discovery is performed prior to the matter going to arbitration. The carrier does not believe that this clause is meant to prevent an insured from including a Mandatory Arbitration clause in a Scope of Engagement letter, as Arbitration is typically a good way to reduce defense costs and get a quicker resolution. The downside is that the decisions typically cannot be appealed from.
  - q. The Smith case had another interesting point apropos to the suggestions in this article to document in writing caveats, risk factors, and limitations on the scope of what an estate planning representation can provide: "Smith contends she could not have given her informed consent to the agreement unless Calello orally warned her that she would have to arbitrate any malpractice claims against him. And there is no evidence that he gave such a warning." The unfortunate lesson for practitioners is that the effort to document many issues, risk factors, and limitations may be necessary to protect the practitioner from claims by the client that they were not informed of those matters.
- gg. Conclusion
- a. While the outcome of the instant case is uncertain, the lessons to estate planners in all disciplines is worrisome. The cost and disruption of suits like this, even if the practitioners challenged are victorious are horrific. In smaller firms they could be nothing less than financially devastating. The harm to a practitioner's reputation (or a firm's reputation), even if ultimately, they prove no wrongdoing, can be incredibly detrimental. Perhaps this type of challenge can be deflected in some instances by some of the cautious practices suggested above. However, it is possible that in this case the practitioners involved documented their file with memorandum and other communications well beyond what most clients on smaller estates might be willing to pay for. So, the reality for many practitioners is a catch-22. One should take steps feasible to protect oneself from claims by informing clients and documenting that they have been informed. But practitioners also have to earn a living and cannot possibly afford to take all of the steps that they might wish to take, or that they should take. That is why liability should not be imposed where the practitioner conduct meets the standard of practice and the law recognizes the inherent uncertainty and risks associated with estate planning.

39. Matrimonial – Alimony Termination.<sup>54</sup>

- a. A husband's obligation to pay alimony was terminated by the court noting the following facts: Payor was seventy-five years old. His health had declined, he had cardiac problems, a pacemaker, was hospitalized for cardiac arrhythmia, and took thirteen medications.
- b. The court determined to decision to terminate alimony on the basis of the payor's retirement was found to be supported by sufficient credible evidence.
- c. When completing a financial or estate plan, how long should an obligation to pay lifetime alimony be presumed to continue? That may be critical to the planning. Considering the standards of the above case is it ever reasonable to assume that alimony will assuredly cease?

40. New York.

- a. New York had a rule recapturing or "clawing-back" gifts made within three years of death. Prior to the 2014 changes to New York's estate tax residents could make large inter-vivos gifts and reduce their New York estate tax. New York had a temporary gift recapture (clawback) but it was extended through the end of 2025. The gift recapture did not apply to gifts of non-New York real and tangible personal property, or to those dying after 2018. The clawback was reinstated retroactively to January 1, 2019 (but excluding gifts during the two weeks from January 1-15, 2019) and will now continue through the end of 2025. Those subject to New York estate tax should consider the impact of this when planning large gifts to use the current high temporary federal exemption amount.<sup>55</sup>
- b. New York got whipsawed on an estate that did not file a federal estate tax return.<sup>56</sup> The facts in the case succinctly were that the husband died in New York in 2010 when there was no federal estate tax. A New York QTIP election was made but no federal estate tax return was filed so no federal QTIP election was made. The wife, as surviving spouse, died in 2014 in New York. A resident gross estate is defined as federal gross estate. But because the husband died in 2010 when there was no federal QTIP election, the court held that the QTIP assets could not be included in federal gross estate and could not therefore be included in her New York gross estate. New York has passed legislation providing that regardless as to whether the first to die spouse's estate was required to file a federal estate tax return, if that spouse's estate filed a New York estate tax return that made a QTIP election, the New York surviving spouse has to include that property in her New York gross estate. This is effective for estates dying on or after on or after April 1, 2019.<sup>57</sup>

- c. New York's so-called millionaire tax was extended to 2024.<sup>58</sup>

41. Partnership - 754 Elections.

- a. Increasing income tax basis has become the focus of much of estate planning. When assets are held in a partnership, or in a limited liability company taxed as a partnership, the full benefit of the income tax basis step up is not achieved unless the partnership can increase its inside basis as to the asset involved. But to accomplish this the partnership must make an election to adjust its basis under Code Sec. 754.
- b. This election must be made in a written statement that is filed with the partnership's timely filed return (including any extension) for the tax year during which the distribution or transfer occurs. Reg. Sec. 1.6031-1. The statement must include the name and address of the partnership, and a declaration that the partnership elects under section 754 to apply the provisions of section 734(b) and section 743(b). If a valid election has been made under section 754 for a preceding taxable year and not revoked a new election is not required to be made. The election must be signed by any one of the partners.
- c. The IRS granted an extension of time for a partnership to make the basis adjustment election.<sup>59</sup>
- d. In the ruling the taxpayer had inadvertently failed to file a timely election to adjust the basis of a partnership property. The IRS found that the taxpayer acted reasonably and in good faith.

42. Probate – Estate Tax Liability.

- a. Recipients of an estate's assets were liable for federal estate tax.<sup>60</sup>
- b. The decedent owned property jointly with his children and prior to death also transferred property to a grandchild. The estate tax return was not filed until almost eight years following death. The beneficiaries had made a few payments towards the estate tax liability but it remainder largely unpaid.
- c. For there to be transferee liability the IRS show that the estate tax was not paid, and that the transferee/beneficiary received property that was included in the gross estate. Code Sec. 6324(a)(2).

- d. The forgiveness of a loan on between the decedent and the grandchild was a transfer within three years of death and included in the gross estate under Code Sec. 2035. The decedent had retained a life estate in the family farm so that it was included in the gross estate under Code Sec. 2036.
- e. Each beneficiary was held liable for his or her proportionate amount of the estate tax.

43. Probate – Estate Tax Liability.

- a. In an action to collect estate tax from the heirs of an estate, the 10th Circuit held that the transferee-liability claim under Code Sec. 6324(a)(2) was timely.<sup>61</sup>
- b. Background. Code Sec. 6502(a) provides the general rule that, where the assessment of any tax has been made within the period of limitation, such tax may be collected by levy or by a proceeding in court, but only if the levy is made or the proceeding begun within 10 years after the assessment.
- c. If the estate tax due is unpaid, a transferee such as a beneficiary who received property that is included in the gross estate under Code Sec. 2034-2042, is personally liable for the unpaid estate tax.<sup>62</sup>
- d. The assessment of unpaid tax against a beneficiary must be made within one year after of the assessment period against the estate.<sup>63</sup>
- e. Decedent died testate in 1991. Decedent died leaving four children who were the beneficiaries against whom the IRS sought to impose the liability for unpaid estate taxes. Most of the estate consisted of stock in a hotel business and the estate elected to defer estate tax under Code Sec. 6166. Assets of the estate passed to a trust which was later liquidated pursuant to an agreement that acknowledged the deferred estate tax. The estate paid much of the estate tax but failed to pay it all. The IRS maintained that the executors were liable under Code Sec. 3713(b). The executors could not avoid liability for unpaid tax by the contract signed with the beneficiaries terminating the trust to which the residuary estate was distributed. The court found that the 10 year statute of limitations in Code Sec. 6502(a) applied and was suspended because the estate deferred estate tax under Code Sec. 6166.
- f. The taxpayers argued that even if a Code Sec. 6166 election suspended the limitations period for the estate, the limitations period set out in Code Sec. 6901(a) governed transferee liability; the taxpayers argued the government never timely and properly assessed them by following the procedure set out in Code Sec. 6901(a).

- a. The Second Circuit has affirmed the Tax Court's denial of tax deductions claimed by pension beneficiaries on their individual return for funeral and estate administration expenses of the deceased pensioner.<sup>64</sup>
- b. Taxpayer received gross distributions as the beneficiary of her father's retirement plan. The taxpayer paid various expenses related to her father's death and the administration of his estate, including funeral expenses and professional fees. She claimed deductions relating to these as an estate tax deduction on Schedule A, Itemized Deductions.
- c. The court also disallowed the itemized deductions for funeral expenses and estate administration fees. Code Sec. 262 provides that no deduction is permitted for personal expenses except as expressly provided in the Code. Funeral expenses are personal expenses, which are allowed only to the estate under IRC Sec. 2053. The claimed deductions of estate administration expenses against income in respect of a decedent ("IRD") was also disallowed as not authorized by IRC Sec. 691(b), which limits those deductions to trade or business expenses, interest, taxes, investment expenses, and depletion.
- d. The 2nd Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed that the funeral and estate expenses were personal, living, or family expenses, which may not be deducted on an income tax return unless specifically permitted.

45. Probate – Estate Tax Liability IRD.

- a. The Tax Court denied an income tax deduction (reported as a miscellaneous itemized deduction on the heir's Form 1040, Schedule A) for the estate tax attributable to predeceased father-in-law.<sup>65</sup> The taxpayer claimed the deduction based on the Federal estate tax attributable to distributions she received from inherited IRAs and an annuity. She had received the distributions on the death of her husband.
- b. While Code Sec. 691(a) provides that income in respect of a decedent (IRD) is includible in gross income and a deduction is permitted for the estate tax attributable to that IRD, the taxpayer did not demonstrate that there was any tax on her husband's estate.

46. QTIP.

- a. The executor was granted an extension of time to make a qualified terminable interest property ("QTIP") election.<sup>66</sup> The executor hired an attorney to prepare the estate's Form 706, but the estate was believed to be less than the basic exclusion amount so no QTIP election was made. However, after the estate tax return was filed an additional asset was discovered that made the estate taxable and hence the need for a QTIP election.

- b. The IRS granted an extension of time for a Qualified Domestic Trust (“QDOT”) to notify the IRS of a beneficiary’s citizenship.<sup>67</sup>
- c. The trustees of a QDOT were granted an extension of time to file Form 706-QDT, and certify that the decedent’s surviving spouse had become a U.S. citizen . At the time of the decedent’s death, the spouse was not a citizen of the U.S. The spouse established a QDOT under Code Sec. 2056A and funded it with assets that would have passed outright to the spouse from the decedent’s estate.

48. Rental expenses.

- d. This case discusses the denial of a taxpayers claimed rental expense deductions but has an interesting and important discussion of deduction of personal expenses, such as legal fees. This is a matter that affects many estate planners as clients often pay estate planning expenses from entities and other sources to endeavor to claim a deduction.
- e. The Tax Court has denied a taxpayer's deductions for rental expenses and legal and professional fees.<sup>68</sup> Many of the denied deductions seemed personal in nature, the Court noting that many pertained to the client’s child’s divorce.
- f. Code Sec. 162(a) allows a deduction for ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred in carrying on a trade or business. Code Sec. 212 allows a deduction for ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred in connection with an activity engaged in for the production of income.
- g. The deductibility of legal fees depends on the origin and character of the claim for which the legal fees were incurred. Does the underlying claim have sufficient nexus to the taxpayer's business or income-producing activities so that it can be deducted under either 162 or 212? The Supreme Court held that whether legal fees are deductible expenses or nondeductible personal expenses depends upon whether the claim arises in connection with profit-seeking or personal activities of the taxpayer.<sup>69</sup> This is known as the "origin of the claim" test.
- h. Code Sec. 262(a) denies deductions for personal, living, or family expenses.
- i. Code Sec. 6001 requires taxpayers to maintain sufficient records to establish the amount and purpose of a deduction.
- j. In the Sholes case the taxpayer did not produce any invoices from lawyers that explained the nature of the services performed. No invoices produced contained a description of the services that would allow allocation between personal and business expenses.
- k. If the origin of the claim was a divorce, the legal expenses would not be deductible even if the result affected income-producing property.

49. S Corporations - ESBT.

- a. Proposed Regulations, effective January 1, 2019, were issued that provide that a nonresident alien beneficiary of an ESBT is subject to income tax.<sup>70</sup> Prior to the 2017 tax act nonresident aliens (“NRA”) were not permissible beneficiaries of an ESBT. Post-2017 tax act a nonresident alien individual still cannot be a direct shareholder of an S corporation or it disqualifies the S corporation. The 2017 tax act change the law to permit a non-resident alien to be a current beneficiary of an ESBT without causing disqualification of the S corporation election.
- b. A trust can be both a grantor trust and an ESBT. If a trust qualifies as both, in whole or part, the grantor trust rules trump the ESBT rules. If a non-resident alien were allocated income under the grantor trust rules, in certain instances that might result in avoiding of income tax. For example, if the NRA was domiciled in a country with an income tax treaty, the treaty might result in that income not being subject to income tax. Similarly, if an NRA were allocated under the grantor trust rules foreign source income, or income not effectively connected with the conduct of a U.S. trade or business, that income might avoid taxation as well.
- c. The proposed regulations require that certain S corporation income of an ESBT must be included in the S portion of the ESBT income, and not allocated to an NRA as an owner under the grantor trust rules.

50. Tax Identification Numbers.

- a. Effective May 13, 2019 only a responsible party can obtain a Tax Identification Number (“TIN”). A responsible party must be an individual who themselves has a TIN.
- b. Entities will be prohibited from using their own EINs to obtain additional EINs.
- c. The new requirement will apply to both the paper filed Forms SS-4 as well as online applications.

51. Trusts - Companies.

- a. US Trust is no longer.
- b. “U.S. Trust, Bank of America's private bank which caters to ultra-high net worth clients, will become Bank of America Private bank, and Merrill Lynch Private Banking & Investment Group will become Merrill Private Wealth Management, dropping the "Lynch.”<sup>71</sup>
- c. Remarkable. What does this mean as to the value of other venerable names in the estate planning community?

52. Trusts – QDOT.

- a. The IRS granted an extension of time to file that a Qualified Domestic Trust (“QDOT”) beneficiary had become a U.S. citizen.<sup>72</sup>

- a. The circumstances did not cause the grantor of the trust to be treated as the owner of any portion of the trust as long as the trust was a domestic trust and the Power of Appointment Committee (“PAC”) remained in existence.<sup>73</sup> The PAC members did not have the power exercisable by themselves to vest trust income or corpus in themselves, none of the members were treated as owners of the trust. The circumstances did cause administrative controls to be considered exercisable primarily for the benefit of the grantor. The powers held by the PAC members under the grantor’s consent power were exercisable only in conjunction with the grantor so that the PACC committee members did not possess general powers of appointment. Moreover, in each case, the powers held by the committee members were not general powers. Accordingly, in each case, any distribution made from the trust to a beneficiary, other than the grantor, did not constitute gifts by the PAC members, but rather by the grantor.

54. Trusts - Qualified Disability Trusts.

- a. The 2017 tax act provided that the personal exemption for a taxpayer, have been suspended, as they are for most trusts and estates, other than disability trust which effectively will enjoy an exemption of $4,150.
- b. The qualified disability trust exemption, from 2018 through 2025, is not subject to phaseout.

55. Trusts – State Taxation.

- a. The U.S. Supreme Court granted Certiorari on January 11, 2018 to hear a case involving the issue as to whether a state can tax a trust’s income solely on the basis of an in-state beneficiary.<sup>74</sup>
- b. The issue in Kaestner and other cases is whether, if a trust has limited contacts with a state, will those contacts suffice for that state to tax the income of that particular trust? The question is particularly nettlesome with respect to a state’s income taxation of undistributed income of a trust.
- c. In Kaestner the current beneficiary resided in North Carolina, and that was enough for the state to assert the right to taxation. However, the North Carolina Supreme Court held that it violated the Constitution to tax the trust. The court referenced Quill and minimum contacts that might be required to be able to tax a trust. Important to the analysis was that the trust was a separate taxpayer from the beneficiaries who lived in NC. Kaestner, the settlor of the trust, was a New York resident. The trustee initially was a New York person and later changed to Connecticut. The contingent beneficiaries were not in North Carolina. Was that enough to establish the minimum contacts necessary so that North Carolina could subject the trust to income taxation? The case made an analogy to an entity. A beneficiary might be analogous to a shareholder. That should not be enough.

- d. Another noteworthy state trust income taxation case similarly held that there were insufficient contacts with the state of Minnesota and the Minnesota Supreme Court held that taxing the trust also violated due process.
- e. The recent Wayfair case may also have an effect on these and other cases addressing the state income taxation of trusts. The Supreme Court concluded that a state can require company to collect a sales tax. The taxpayer had no physical presence in most states so does that mean those states cannot require that they collect sales tax? The Supreme Court held that physical presence is not the right test with the internet and electronic commerce. As a result, there no longer is a requirement to have physical presence. Wayfair overturned the Quill case which had required physical presence to charge sales tax. In Quill, the court found that the sales tax requirements did not violate the due process clause. It found that a volume of mailings into the state satisfied due process.
- f. The relevance of Wayfair and Quill to the determination of state income taxation of trusts could be significant in that Quill, now superseded by Wayfair, had been cited in many of the recent federal income tax cases in terms of the requisite minimum contacts for state taxation of trusts. So, the Wayfair analysis may now be the relevant litmus test instead of Quill and that might impact the outcome. In the Wayfair case how did they establish substantial nexus? Companies in other states will be required to collect sales tax if they have 200 or more separate transactions, and $100,000 of sales, into the state. If Quill, which required physical presence, has been overruled by Wayfair, will trust taxation change?
- g. On April 19, 2019 oral arguments were presented to the United States Supreme Court in the case. The Supreme Court is being requested to address, on due process grounds, whether a North Carolina statute permitting that state to tax a contingent beneficiary/resident on their share of the undistributed trust income when there is limited nexus to the state. Neither the settlor nor the trustee are residents of North Carolina, and the trust has no contact with North Carolina other than the residence of the beneficiary.

56. Wandry – Reconsider Classic Wandry Clauses in light of Powell?

- a. Many practitioners believe a Wandry clause provides security to deflect a valuation challenge by the IRS of a transfer to, for example, an irrevocable trust.<sup>75</sup> Other practitioners might view the protection as less secure. An illustrative Wandry clause is below:
- b. Sample Clause: “I have this day executed this Declaration of Gift and separate Assignments and Stock Powers Separate from Certificates (the “Assignment”) transferring (the “Transfer”) shares of stock (the “Gift Shares”) bearing the following values, as of the date of this transfer, to the Thomas Client-Name 2018 Irrevocable Trust (“Trust”): Dollar Number ($_____ .00) value of the shares of Common Stock, no par value, of Entity-Name Corp., a State-Name corporation (“Entity-Name”) (the “Entity-Name Gift Shares”). The Transfer of the Gift Shares to the Trust is intended to constitute, and constitutes, the complete and irrevocable gift of all of the aforementioned Gift Shares. The Transfer is made by way of gift and without any consideration. I have had a good-faith determination of such values made by an independent third-party professional experienced in such matters and appropriately qualified to make such a determination. Based on such determination, the number of shares constituting the Entity-Name Gift Shares is _____ Number shares. Nevertheless, if the IRS challenges such valuation and a final determination of a different value is made by the IRS or a court of law, the number of gifted Shares shall be adjusted accordingly so that the number of Shares of each entity gifted to the Trust equals the dollar amount set forth above, in the same manner as a federal estate tax formula marital deduction amount would be adjusted for a valuation redetermination by the IRS and/or a court of law. I declare under the penalties of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct and further declare that this Declaration of Gift is being executed effective as of the date of the signature below.”

- c. There might be a different variation of a Wandry clause that might be useful in certain circumstances. In particular, if the transferor must transfer all shares at the closing, can the typical Wandry clause be improved upon? What might be dubbed a “Two-tiered Wandry” may provide a planning solution. A “two-tier Wandry” arrangement would consist of a two-part transaction: a traditional Wandry transfer, followed by a simultaneous sale of any shares (or other assets) left by the Wandry adjustment clause if it is triggered. There may be income tax or contractual reasons for the need to transfer all equity. The problem with a Wandry clause is that it could leave shares in the selling taxpayer or trust’s hands, which may not be desirable for business or personal reasons. This could create uncertainty with respect to the trust’s ESBT status if all S corporation shares are sold but the operation of a Wandry clause results in shares having remained in the trust. For example, does the ESBT election end when all shares are sold? If so what occurs when it is later determined that S corporation shares are held in the selling trust? The second tier of the Wandry arrangement would consist of a second sale of any shares, effective as of the same date as the primary Wandry sale, that remain in the selling taxpayer or trust’s hands. The price for this second sale, if any, would be for a price equal to the gift tax value as finally determined. This second tier Wandry sale would be supported by a note for that on which interest would accrue from closing and be made current within a specified time period, e.g., 90-days of the final determination.
- d. The two-tier Wandry, i.e. a traditional Wandry adjustment mechanism coupled with a sale of any interests left in the transferor’s hands may have another use post-Powell/Cahill.

- e. Code Section 2036 provides that if the decedent could have pulled the 2036 “strings” “alone or in conjunction with any other person.” The entity interests will be included in the estate.
- f. In Powell<sup>76</sup>, the decedent’s son made several fundamental mistakes when planning his mother’s estate. While it’s no surprise that the Tax Court ruled against the estate, the Tax Court’s reasoning on at least one point was novel. After summarizing the case, the errors made in planning the decedent’s estate, including misusing a power of attorney, engaging in aggressive last-minute planning, not having a business purpose for a family limited partnership, and running afoul of IRC §2036 will be reviewed. The discussion will cover the Tax Court’s extension of IRC §2036(a)(2) to limited partnership interests and the possibility of double taxation (or an increased step up in basis) in FLP inclusion cases.
- g. The underlying cash and securities transferred to the limited partnership interests were includable in the estate under IRC §2036(a)(2) (transfer with right to designate enjoyment of the property) because the decedent had the ability, when acting along with her sons, to dissolve the FLP. The Tax Court found that the exception in IRC §2036 (transfers for full and adequate consideration) did not apply in this case because Jeffrey had no significant nontax reason for the transfer. Thus, in some instances the decedent’s retained right to control “in conjunction with” could undermine the planning. How far this concept will be interpreted to extend is unclear, but the later Cahill case expanded the same reasoning of Powell to a split-dollar insurance contract.
- h. The court in Cahill focused on this requirement and noted that the decedent (really through his son as trustee of the revocable trust) had the right to terminate the split-dollar agreements in conjunction with the trustee of the MB Trust (the ILIT). That, in the Court’s view, satisfied the 2036 and 2038 requirements because the two trustees could have, in the court’s view, merely terminated the split-dollar agreement and the Revocable Trust would have received the cash value of the policy. The estate’s counter to this was that it would not make economic sense for the ILIT to allow termination of the split-dollar agreements since that would harm the beneficiaries of the ILIT. However, the son and his descendants were the beneficiaries. The estate argued that such a termination was so unlikely that the termination rights had no value as of decedent’s date of death. On this basis, the estate contended that the value of decedent’s interests in the split-dollar agreements was limited to the value of decedent’s death benefit rights. The difference between the two was dramatic.
- i. Code Sec. 2036 can apply to include in the value of the gross estate the value of:
  - i. All property that the decedent had transferred during lifetime [The Cahill Court viewed the transfer of the premium payments from the Survivor’s trust (the decedent’s revocable trust) to the ILIT as constituting the property transferred],

- ii. Over which the decedent retained for life the right, alone or in conjunction with another person, to designate the person or persons who shall possess or enjoy the property or the income therefrom. The Cahill Court viewed the right of the Survivor's Trust and the ILIT together to terminate the IGSD agreement as the right "in conjunction with another" to designate who would enjoy the property, i.e. the cash value resulting from the premiums paid.
- j. A response to this uncertain and potentially expansive view of Code Sec. 2036(a)(2) might be to reconsider the traditional Wandry adjustment mechanism and use a different approach to assure that no equity remains with the transferor in order to assure that the transferor cannot "in conjunction with" control any of the entity interests transferred. This could take the form of a more robust price adjustment mechanism where all interests are transferred with the excess interests being transferred to a non-taxable receptacle (GRAT, marital trust, charity, or incomplete gift trust). Another alternative is to structure a two-tier Wandry. Under this latter approach any equity that is not transferred to, for example, the buying trust, would be sold pursuant to a sale contract executed the same day as the primary gift or sale that is subject to a Wandry clause. The sale price under that contract would be the gift tax value as finally determined. While that may make what was a simple Wandry adjustment more complex, perhaps it can deflect an expansive Powell/Cahill challenge by assuring no equity remains with the transferor.

57. Wealth Transfers.

- a. "The amount of inherited wealth up for grabs is staggering and getting larger. In a U.S. High-Net-Worth and Ultra-High-Net-Worth Markets 2018 report, Cerulli Associates estimated that $68 trillion is transferring over the next 25 years to heirs and charities, an amount significantly higher than earlier estimates (known as "The Great Wealth Transfer")."
- b. While studies differ on the percent of beneficiaries firing their advisors when the estate transfers, most agree that advisors who ignore the inheriting generation, including spouses, are at a greater risk of losing them. Yet most advisors aren't engaging the beneficiaries.
- c. Cerulli reported that 45% of high-net-worth practices have had limited interactions with their clients' children, while only 59% have established relationships with clients' spouses."<sup>77</sup>
- d. The implication of the statistics and the discussion in the article is that all practitioners should endeavor to open dialogues not just with clients, but with client heirs. This is something wealth management firms appear to routinely

Sherman, "The Great Wealth Transfer Wake-Up Call," Apr 12, 2019 https://www.wealthmanagement.com/high-net-worth/great-wealth-transfer-wake-call?NL=WM-27&Issue=WM-27\_20190420\_WM-27\_894&sfvc4enews=42&cl=article\_11\_b&utm\_rid=CPG09000005740948&utm\_campaign=19878&utm\_medium=email&elq2=a9d40e9addb14f2da4938fb30bdf44f7

address. Attorneys and CPAs, with hourly billing models and practices that tend to be more focused on compliance and document creation appear to have done much less. Those practice models need to evolve.

- e. The take home messages to estate planners and all allied professionals is that apart from the vicissitudes of the tax system there should be more emphasis on building relationships with heirs and helping clients and their heirs focus on the impact of wealth transition.

58. Wealth Managers – Time Allocations.

- a. Advisers divide their time as follows: 55.3% client facing activities including meeting time with current clients, acquisition of new clients, client services and plan preparation. 21.2% administrative activities such as compliance, back office matters, etc. 17.4% investment management including research, due diligence and asset management, and 6.1% professional development.<sup>78</sup>
- b. The Morningstar monograph asks: “But if you could choose, would you rather spend more time with clients, building stronger relationships and looking for opportunities to increase your assets under management? Some advisers are doing just that by turning over the labor-intensive tasks of investment management – everything from establishing an asset allocation strategy and implement portfolio decision to providing risk management and ongoing oversight – to a third party investment management firm.”
- c. These statistics and the prospect of outsourcing investment management raise a host of fascinating questions for the entire profession. Consider:
- d. The Morningstar monograph wisely suggests that wealth managers focus on what is most important to their business and where they add the most value to clients. That may not be in the tedium of the weeds of investment management but in client interaction, holistic planning, and keeping the plan on track. This is a profound paradigm shift that all advisers need to consider. How much time does an attorney spend drafting documents rather than interacting with a client to determine whether their plan is on track, what issues might exist and more? For attorneys that have not automated their practices and begun outsourcing not essential tasks, they should take heed.
- e. If wealth managers spend 55.3% of their time in client facing activities how can CPAs, attorneys and perhaps other advisers ever hope to develop the deep relationship with clients that a wealth adviser can? They probably can’t. What does that mean for referrals, client relationships and so much more?
- f. If wealth advisers only spend 17.4% of their time on wealth management, and may in greater numbers now outsource that, what does that mean to the professional advisor team? Estate planning attorneys often lament that wealth advisers usurp their role and their work. The Ceruli statistics seem to suggest why that is possible, and the Morningstar report suggests that it will expand. What are estate planners doing about this?

- g. If wealth advisers only spend 17.4% of their time on wealth management, and may in greater numbers now outsource that, what does that mean to the client? What is it that a client believes he or she is paying for? Will this reality change that? Might clients rethink their relationship with wealth advisers if such a small percentage of time is spent on actual investment management and that in fact more and more of that may be outsourced? Might clients opt to hire unbundled lower cost investment advisers and hire other professionals as they require services rather than pay a larger AUM fee to a wealth adviser? Consider the percentage of time that CPAs spend on tax compliance and attorneys on document drafting? No doubt the percentages are dramatically greater, thereby reducing the potential abilities of CPAs and attorneys to build the same strength in their client relationships that wealth advisers build.
- h. If wealth advisers spend about 6% of their time on professional development, assuming a 2,000-hour year that is about 120 hours/year. That might be three times what some other professionals might spend based on continuing education requirements for other professionals. If that is the case, might that mean that wealth advisers are spending substantially more time learning than their peers in other allied professions? With such rapid changes in technology, tax laws, the economy and so forth, might that imply an edge that wealth advisers have and are adding to as compared to other advisers?
- i. There are other interesting data presented in this monograph that should be considered in light of this discussion. Wealth management firms and trust companies routinely appear to limit their liability for estate planning. See the discussion under the “Malpractice” category. It appears common, perhaps the norm, for wealth advisers and trust companies to maintain that they do not provide legal or tax services, that somehow those services are solely within the purview of the attorney and CPA. Yet wealth advisor firms routinely meet with clients and discuss tax and estate planning. It also appears based on other discussions in this monograph that wealth advisers are increasingly charging additional fees for planning services. Is it possible for wealth advisers to limit the scope of their liability, and charge additional fees, for work that CPAs and attorneys have traditionally done? Yes. What does this mean to the professional generally? What must CPAs and attorneys do to maintain their client relationships and contacts?

59. Wealth Managers – Who is the Estate Planner?

- a. A recent article points out how far some wealth managers will go to usurp the role of estate planners and why multidisciplinary teaming is so difficult to accomplish. The real tragedy is that this type of overreach will expose financial advisers to liability, it destroys the checks and balances and sharing of ideas a collaborative planning team can provide and hurts clients.<sup>79</sup>

- b. “Managing investments is easy. Taking care of clients in their most acute time of need is hard. A recent tragedy concerning a client vividly brought home this reality.”
- c. Here’s the planning situation the financial adviser paints. What’s wrong with this picture? “The call came on a Wednesday morning. A client visiting her sister out of state had become acutely ill and uncommunicative. She was rushed to the emergency department by ambulance. Her partner, scrambling to get a flight to be with her, called us to let us know what happened. By the evening our client was in the intensive care unit, still uncommunicative. Her condition quickly worsened. Her partner arrived and it was determined our client would need to be placed on a ventilator or she would die. At this point, the hospital asked for documentation showing that our client’s partner was indeed the health care surrogate. All of our clients have an electronic vault containing their important documents. The problem? The client’s partner couldn’t remember how to get in the vault. She texted us and asked us to fax the living will and health care surrogate document to the hospital and we promptly obliged.”
- d. The client called her financial adviser to get a copy of her living will, not the attorney who drafted it and more likely understood the issues involved better.
- e. The article continues: “Our client, a delightful spitfire, had suffered serious health issues in the last three years. Although she was still enjoying life, she was losing her verve. In our last conversation about advance directives, she made it perfectly clear that if she had a serious health event that was going to kill her, she wanted to be kept comfortable and have as peaceful a death as possible. Her partner participated in these meetings and agreed to support her wishes. The client also shared her wishes with her entire family.... I gently reminded her of our advance directive conversations through the years.”
- f. So, the financial planner, without the attorney, met with the client and her partner to discuss end of life decisions excluding the attorney. The newest member of the planning team, especial for ill or aging clients, is a care manager. If the client had had these issues for three years, why was a care manager not involved? Albeit in the instant case the author of the article, a brilliant financial planner, has a medical background and may have had the expertise to address the issues involved. But that is a rare situation and not one that would be appropriate for most financial advisers.
- g. “Attorneys complete living wills and health care surrogate documents but they don’t make the time for education about how to actually prepare for a serious health event. Advisors can take this advance directive planning a step further by helping the client document their desired quality of life in the event they can no longer speak for themselves due to a health condition.” So, attorneys don’t take the time to discuss the decisions in the documents they prepare? Perhaps one of the issues is how planners bill versus attorneys. This is an issue that rankles most attorneys and too often is used by financial planners to usurp the role of the attorney. A dangerous practice for clients. The financial adviser who bills an asset management fee has that fee subtracted as a line item in a lengthy monthly statement. The estate planning attorney on the other hand sends a bill for which the client has to write a check. What the financial adviser should be doing if he or she cared about her client is insisting that the client include the attorney, CPA, insurance consultant and other advisers in annual reviews, but too often they don’t. As this article corroborates many financial advisers believe that they have the knowledge to handle all of these areas. While some firms have extensive expertise, many do not have the same breadth of knowledge. But this conduct can prevent a client team from being formed and can harm the client by having less than the most knowledgeable adviser involved.

- h. “As my client’s story shows, people need someone to initiate the discussion, get the documents in place, codify the quality-of-life discussion, know where the documents are located and provide access when required. This is not something doctors or attorneys do.” Seriously?
- i. Another article cited the growth in estate planning services provided by wealth management firms: ““So it’s not surprising that 45 percent of wealth management firms now offer estate and succession planning as primary services, up from 37 percent just a year ago, according to Cerulli Associates. The data provider estimated that demand for these capabilities will continue to snowball: Over the next 25 years, $68 trillion of wealth will be transferred in the U.S. alone.”<sup>80</sup>

60. Wealth Management – Fees.

- a. *“Cerulli found that clients have gradually been paying more attention to the fees advisors are charging them. The firm’s surveys show that the percentage of investors who believe the advice they receive is either free or who are unsure of what they pay has gone from 65 percent in 2011 to 42 percent in 2018. Advisors apparently know what’s going on: 75 percent of those surveyed told Cerulli that prospective clients are more sensitive about fees than they were five years ago. About 42 percent of advisors also expect their fees to decline, mainly because of the growth of robo-advisors. At the same time, clients are more willing to pay for financial advice, with 53 percent saying in a survey last year that they were willing to pay for financial investment advice, up from 38 percent in 2009. 76 percent of investors agreed that the value they receive from financial advisors is worth the expense, the survey found.”<sup>81</sup>

- b. How should advisers structure fees? How can advisers demonstrate a value add for the fees charged?

61. Wealth Management – Who are Clients.

- a. “The average age of wealth management clients now stands at 64, according to data from global consulting firm Simon-Kucher & Partners...”<sup>82</sup>
- b. What type of work and planning to clients at this age require?
- c. “It’s just plain silly,” advisor Randy Bruns of Model Wealth in Downers Grove, Illinois, says of using the AUM fee model with younger clients. “On one end you have millennials with serious financial planning needs, and a pricing structure that cannot serve them. And on the other end, you have clients paying tens of thousands of dollars just because they’ve saved well. Less wealthy consumers are penalized for having not yet saved, and wealthy consumers are penalized for decades of saving. It’s so strange. And it can lead to some terrible advice as well, simply because of conflicts inherent to the AUM pricing structure.”<sup>83</sup>
- d. In reality this type of adjustment might happen as some firms do discount the AUM fee as assets increase above certain breakpoints. Perhaps the key issue is identifying the right adviser for the right client so that there is a match of services to the client needs as well as a rationale for the overall fees to the services provided. One of the questions prospective clients should ask is not what the minimum AUM fee is but rather what the firm’s client sweet spot as that is might be the level and nature of services the firm endeavors to provide.

62. Wealth Management – Withdrawal Rates.

- a. “A confluence of factors like increasing longevity, historically low interest rates and high stock prices are prompting some advisors to rethink this entire subject. Some are concluding that clients who want to be sure they don’t outlive their money probably need to consider a withdrawal rate closer to 3% than the traditional 4% or 4.5%.”
- b. If this is correct it has a profound influence on planning, the use of dynasty trusts, and more. If a practitioner is going to project funds required to be retained accessible to a client so that the funds that can be moved outside of the estate and perhaps, depending on the technique selected, outside of the client’s reach. If forecasts are completed to determine whether life insurance should be purchased to insure the premature death of a spouse with respect to a non-reciprocal SLAT plan, a lower feasible withdrawal rate will affect the amount of life insurance that might be advisable. In fact, if a 3% withdrawal rate is correct (and there are many articles suggesting more complex and potentially higher distribution rates) perhaps every clients estate, financial and insurance plan should be revisited. Certainly, a lower withdrawal rate might be used in sensitivity analysis for forecasts.

63. Valuation – Gift Tax Value Closely Held Business.

- a. The value of closely held stock transferred to family members was determined by considering comparable companies and applying relevant discounts.<sup>84</sup> The closely held stock was owned primarily by the donors’ family, directors, and employees. There was an established price the sale and purchase of shares owned by non-family members, but no set price for shares transferred to family members. The company bylaws included a provision that the family was limited to transferring stock by gift, bequest, or sale to other family members. The donors gave minority shares to their children and grandchildren in three years, which were reported on gift tax returns. The court discussion is instructive as to what factors make an appraisal report useful, or not.
- b. “The U.S. District Court – Eastern District of Wisconsin issued an important decision in Kress v. U.S. in which Chief Judge William C. Griesbach relied largely on the findings of the taxpayers’ experts to value gifts of minority interests in a Subchapter S corporation (S corp) operating company, Green Bay Packaging, Inc. (GBP). In those experts’ reports, a Subchapter S corp was first valued on a C corporation (C corp) equivalent basis, which included tax-affecting the entity’s earnings, followed by quantitative and qualitative adjustments to address whether any economic adjustment/benefit should be ascribed to the Subchapter S election (the C to S method).”<sup>85</sup>
- c. The Court found the IRS appraisal lacking because: it failed to consider comparable companies under the market approach, did not address the impact of the economic recession, improperly valued nonoperating assets.
- d. The Court found one of the taxpayer’s appraisal reports useful because: it used accurate projections, accounted for the effects of the recession, relied on management interviews, prior year reports, and the analysis of guideline companies to choose the best comparable companies.
- e. The IRS argued, and the Court agreed that the taxpayer’s appraiser incorrectly evaluated the family transfer restriction in calculating the discount for lack of marketability. Code Sec. 2703 permits consideration of a restriction if it meets three criteria: (1) it is a bona fide business arrangement; (2) it is not a device to transfer property to a decedent's family members for less than full and adequate consideration; and (3) it includes terms that are comparable to similar arm's-length arrangements. The taxpayer's appraiser did not address nor meet the third prong of the test.
